Our father and mother took the west side train last Monday morning intending to go to Millwaukee county, Wisconsin, where they spent their youthful days, and where the writer first experienced the blessings of broad day-light. From there they started to Oregon 29 years ago, on the 21th day of last Feb., traveling across the plains and arriving in Oregon during the last part of October of the same year, where they have ever since lived. A Mysterious Death.

Austin Stanton, who worked for the railroad company last fall as foreman of a gang of carts, and afterwards of a rock gang, returned to resume work for the company this spring. On last Monday morning Mr. Morrison at Pioneer found Mr. Stanton by the barn complaining with his side, who said he had been kicked and that he was going to die from the effects of it. While Mr. Morrison was there talking to him he commenced throwing up blood in large quantities which looked like it was clotted. Mr. Morrison took him to his house and put him to bed. The next morning he got up with his things and was going to leave, but Mr. Morrison persuaded him to stay and he remained during that day and the next night. In the meantime Mr. Merrison seut A. J. He had proceeded some distance from the house where he laid down on the grass by the roadside. Soon after a neigh-bor came along who, with Mr. Morrison, followed after him. Soon after finding him he expired. He was taken back to Mr. Morrison's house and dressed and was burried last Friday. Refore he died it appears that he had taken all of his letters and had torn off the post marks from them. He expressed to some one a desire that informa tion concerning him and his death should not reach his people. No traces of the whereabouts of his relatives if he has any has been found. It is said that he told some one that he had been kicked by a person at Corvallis and it had gotten away
