A Friend to the Freedmen. St. Joseph Saturday Evening, Aug. 1, 1881. S. Brown and E. C. Smith have a large heretage of humanity and when we see how little is done to alleviate the misery of the great mass of humanity we are almost out of patience with life.

With such incontrovertible proof of the beneficent nature of the remedy, it is not strange that a soldier, always solicitous for an accurate knowledge of what could benefit the world in general, should take the earliest opportunity of visiting the inventor and proprietor of the medicine at the World's Epileptic Institute.

On making known our wishes, he very kindly accompanied us in our tour of inspection through the magnificent building and grounds.

Almost as soon as we entered the offices of the inventor we were met by a wonderful collection of photographs, numbering some where in the thousands. All nations, ages and stations were represented. The elegant curative of the society leader was made by the side with the picture of the humblest and innocent childhood and withered old age showed in their counterfeited presentiments the gratitudes they could not speak; doctors, lawyers, ministers of the gospel, school teachers, plain mothers of families, haughty children of wealth, rich and poor, high and low, black and white, all were represented.

"How wonderfully fortunate as well as talented you are," we exclaimed in amazement. "The Nerve has proved a perfect gold mine."

"I am not one to underestimate the value of wealth," he answered, "for I have known what it is to be without it, but what of the most colossal fortune that was ever in the grasp of mortal man in comparison to the good my remedy is doing? Picture to yourself, if you can, what must be the feeling of an epileptic. Think of him, tormented by dreadful disease so long pronounced incurable. He cannot take part in the studies, duties, employments, recreations or amusements of an ordinary fellow being. He is an object of horror rather than a pity to his friends. His malady never stands still; it is constantly growing worse and more dreadful in all its phases. Last and most dreadful before him stands the specter of insanity. Sleeping or waking he feels it is there, and that sooner or later it will clutch him; and it does. An epileptic must be like Job, tormented to curse Heaven and die. Why, it would bring tears to your eyes to read a letter I received from a gentleman at Potsdam, New York, telling how he had two thousand dollars in his pocket, and was about to go to Europe, when he was seized by the Nerve, entirely cured. That poor fellow can scarcely find words strong enough to express his feelings. That's the kind of a thing to make a man feel happy."
