Let the mild mannered author of the the above extract follow the plox from breaking up "till laying by time" and occasionally get the fretted edge of a corn blade drawn across his cheek, nose or eye ball, in addition to perils from sudden lurches of the plow in contact with stumps; perils from returning roots; perils from snakes, yellow jackets, etc., and then when his crops are maturing and full of promise discover his neighbor's stock holding high carnival in his cornfield. (A farmer heard a preacher discourse on the mild manners a farmer should cultivate toward depredating stock in his fields. That night he was aroused from his slumbers to find his own predatory cow running rlot in a favorite corn patch. After chasing the bovine round and round in the dark and over the maturing corn, meditating the while to some extent, on the

Who Should Keen Bees? It is the man or woman that is not afraid of them, enjoys their company, and never becomes so engrossed in other business but that they can attend to them punctually, just when they need attention, and who have sense enough to help them in their labors rather than retard them. They should be kept at rural or country homes, away from all noise and commotion; and even at our county homes they should be kept as far away from all cider presses and fruit driers as possible, for they both mean death to bees. Is the imported superior to our native black bee? In many respects they are, as from their construction they can gather honey from a number of blossoms that the black bee cannot reach, and their size enables them to gather more honey in the same time. Then they are not near so excitable. Why, even the queen of the muchdreaded hybrid, on opening their hive, will go right on with depositing her eggs while the black queen seems all excitement. Can our country be overstocked with bees? It is with them just as it is with other stock, or even with the human family.

Whenever we put so many sheep or cattle on a field that they eat the grass all up, and keep them there, they will starve; and when the bese Salmon, near Colorado City, was in are also provided with pretty poor become so numerous that there is our city last Wednesday, and paid spellers, and we do not desire to one for every clover blossom, they us quite a visit. Until this is obtained but little good will be accomplished. Tea-total societies do more good in their way but three-fifths of their members belong to the other sex and are chiefly old women and the remaining twofifths are children and a few reformed drunkards. There are a great many men who have very good intentions but unfortunately have not sufficient force them. Such men might never be able to break away entirely from drink although thoroughly persuaded themselves that abstinence was best for them. In such cases joining a temperance society or becoming teatotaller is generally thought, of your cow as you would a lady;' and whittled a stick in the court room for avail for they soon break away and their last state is too often worse than their first. The only way to stop these men from drinking is total suspension. Nothing else will help them. There are others who drink from force of habit. Do they really enjoy drinking? In most cases no in the least, but there are a few who really do. There are those too who drink for the sake of company and of pleasing their friends as they call them, but who are really if they could only see it, their worst enemies. Most of the afore-mentioned would have no objection to total suspension but would welcome the passing of such a law. As for saloon-keepers and those who sell liquors, confirmed drunkards and those who having drank moderately for years cannot or imagine they cannot do without it, these of course naturally kick against total suspension. But laws should be made to benefit the majority and not to suit a minority. It is almost certain if it were to be put to the voters of Oregon a large majority would decide in favor of total suspension of the retail liquor traffic except for medicinal purposes, and it must be taken into consideration that ninety-nine hundredths of the women of Oregon would also be in favor of it. And why should not President Smith, of Sheboygan, the women have a voice in a matter which so closely effects them as the liquor question?
