CABINET MAKING.

The overpowering curiosity of the hour seems to be "Who are going to be President Harrison's cabinet?" Notwithstanding it is only a short time until the president-elect must announce his advisers, the whole country seems filled with burning eagerness to know who are going to form the executive family.

The administration has been entrusted for the next four years to Benjamin Harrison; can we not await his selection and trust to his judgment in naming his lieutenants? The universal verdict of all who know Mr. Harrison personally is that he is possessed of rare, good, common sense, careful and conscientious deliberation in forming his opinions and unswerving firmness in following his judgment when matured. Such a man cannot be hurried or intimidated. That he will endeavor to select the very best material for his cabinet as a whole and the most fitting man for each individual place is assured.

Blaine seems to have been settled upon as the future premier. Certainly there is no able man for the position in America. Under his control of the state department no American at home or abroad would ever need to blush for his country, and no foreign government would ever attempt to enroach upon our rights. Of course he is not the only material for premier. The republican party is rich in the ability and talent of its members, and the incoming president will never lack for large reserves from which to select advisers.

THE NEW SOUTH.

The recent election of United States senators gives the republicans absolute and undisputed control of that body for many years to come. Delaware and New Jersey send republicans in place of Democrats, whose terms expire on March 4th. The Bayards and Saulsburies have owned Delaware time without memory. But not only did the tariff question break the backbone of the solid south—it has disjointed the spinal column of the southern chivalry in Maryland and West Virginia, says the San Jose Mercury. It is the most notable revolution in politics that has occurred for many years. The bone and sinew have begun to think, and by the time that another presidential election shall come around, many other leaders of southern politics will be set aside, and wiser, more liberal minded, broad gage and patriotic men will come to the front, and then the new south will indeed be born.

While a general feeling of sympathy for Corvallis prevails in connection with the location of the state agricultural college, many men of judgment look on it as a matter for all time and not for a few years, and realize that if the agricultural college was made a branch of the state university it could be run at half the expense and would be free from all the complications that now exist. They say the state can well afford to surrender to Corvallis all the property it now has there, to be able to make a good start in the right direction. But the state cannot surrender the property there, because, if it is not used for the purpose specified, the land reverts to the donors who paid for it. The building, costing over $20,000, is on their land, so the rights of all contributors to the land purchase would have to be acquired before the property could be left for Corvallis, if such a measure could pass—Oregonian.

It appears that the intention of Mr. Cleveland to make a European tour after his term expires, has been abandoned, and that he will quietly settle down into a New York practice. A wise change of plans for Mr. Cleveland. Only one ex-President in the last quarter of a century has been great enough to gain luster from a European tour.

PRESIDENT-ELECT HARRISON to a visitor said: "My dear sir, if I were to give an office to every man who has applied for it already by letter or in person, it would take me six years to sign the commissions."
