This sociable question calls to my memory ladies of a church in this city were going to give a chicken-pie social. That strikes me just right-and also below the belt. If there is anything in Oregon that I really "love" it is chicken-pie; I never consider it a foul play to eat half of one, but I do hate to do the carving act. For instance, to plunge a carving knife into crust and suddenly strike a drum-stick, or a wish-bone, or something else, causes emotions to come over one that he has never felt before. I am not very chicken-hearted, but I would always rather be excused from performing this duty.

There are some people in this world, who never notice that there is anything very in. telligent about the prattle of little folks. Well, sometimes there isn't, but too often do the small folks utter expressions which would be a credit to any adult brain. Not cent, returned home yesterdy evening. long ago I was visiting at the home of one of my friends, whose fireside is blessed with some children. One of the number, aged about seven years, was sitting on her mother's lap, and being questioned as to her relations. After being asked how many sisters and brothers she had the mother

- "How many papas have you?" "Two, mamma!" replied the child.
- "Oh, no!" said the mother.

"Aiu't there papa and grand-papa; and. oh yes, I have three-Jesus is the other and modest young men. one," was her answer.

gentlemen who were talking of renting some in 1873, and have since remained rooms. One said to the other that he knew here. of a very desirable "sweet" of rooms that could be secured. I was completely dumbfounded at this remark, and wondered why they were so called sweet. I hunted up the word in Webster's unabridged and found that it was the French way of pronouncing "suite." Now, taking this thing into consideration. I think it would be proper to call the Corvallis candy factory a "sweet" of rooms, and instead of call- Bible in character." It may make some of the attire. fair ones' cheeks turn crimson and the male sex to grin-and bring up bad thoughts, but then it always hits the nail in the proper place. As a temperance lecturer Mr. many. Rork is above the average, he didn't send you crazy with a lot of untruthful statistics clear up into the millions, he doesn't let the axe drop half way and then check it, he brings it clear down. If a saloon keeper sends your child to the penitentiary don't think that he must suffer for it; you are the one who helps this keeper to do such a thing, because you fail to do your duty in not seeing that what laws you have are rigidly enforced. Right here in Corvallis there are numerous instances every day of violation of the city laws, in other respects besides the saloons, and yet they go by unneticed simply because no complaint is entered against such. How then can things be otherwise? You must begin at home in this matter of temperance, I think. Make your homes more attractive—there's where the secret lies. Too many of you imagine that all are alike. Because you have no desire for card-playing is that any reason why every member of your house should look upon cards as worse than the devil itself? Ditto any other legitimate amusement. You scoff at the sight of your daughter walking the street in company of a bar-tender, or a professional gambler, but Make your homes more attractive-there's by not allowing an occasional indulgence of the harmless amusement called dancing in your own house that daughter is attracted to the public ball where she comes in contact with the very fellows whom you onsider not respectable enough to be with her in a pleasure walk.
