A DESIRABLE FARM

Situated two miles above Mehama, Marion county, Or., and three miles from the line of the Oregon Pacific railroad.

—THIS PLACE—

Consists of 452 acres of both hill and level land, containing rich, black soi for meadow purposes. There are about 200 acres that are covered mostly b small underbrush such as hazel, willow, and small firs, which can easily b grubbed up fixing it ready for the plow; the other portion is partly mountain sides and heavy timber but is splendid pasture; eighty acres of this has had the firs slashed and burnt off and is now covered with nice orchard and timothy grass, the seed having been sown five years ago.

.....o.....

A GOOD HOUSE, with the necessary outbuildings, is already erected on the farm close to a running brook; and a barn suitable for most any farmer, is also built; also sheep sheds, etc.

.....o.....

THE ORCHARD consists of about 200 trees of choice varieties—prunes, apples, cherries, etc.; they are now 8 years old and will soon furnish large quantities of fruit. Quite an amount of small fruit also.

.....o.....

There is about fifteen acres seeded to Timothy grass for hay and about THIRTY acres ready for plowing purposes.

.....o.....

THE FENCES are all substantial, ranging from seven to nine rails high; a county road passes along by the place. The north side for over 2 miles is bounded by the clear, running waters of the Little North Fork of the Santiam river, in which is an abundance of mountain trout, and in April and September salmon inhabit the river.

.....o.....

THE PRICE asked is a very reasonable one, and will be made known to any person, desiring to purchase, upon application to F. S. CRAIG, at the office of THE CORVALLIS GAZETTE, Corvallis, Benton Co., Oregon.

COST OF PRIVATE CARS.

"Many extravagant stories are in circulation," said George W. Allen, "as to the cost of private cars, such as are used by railroad magnates, opera sngers, imported actors and millionaires, and I have often heard it stated that an average Pullman palace car is worth $60,000. Stories are printed about cars costing all the way from $100,000 to $200,000. The fact of the matter is that a palace car costs about $12,000 complete. The make-up of all cars, regular or special, is about the same. Additional cost is brought about by the internal decoration, and that must necessarily be limited. I doutbt if there was ever a car constructed that cost more than $35,000. To exceed that figure would require a decoration exclusively in jewels and the pecious metals."

ONE BREECH OF PROMISE CASE.

A very curious breach of promise of marriage case, and one in what is called "high life," is reported from London. The rich and titled defendant was engaged to a young lady, daughter of a minister, but he behaved so wildly and strangely that the young lady's parents, after obtaining medical advice that his sanity was affected, wrote him a letter withdrawing their consent to his marriage with their daughter. He acknowledged and accepted the release, married another lady shortly afterward, and has since exhibited no signs of mental derangement. The young lady sues him for breech of promise on the ground that his release was obtained by false pretenses.

NOT A PIMPLE ON HIM NOW

Bad with Eczema. Hair all gone. Scalp covered with eruptions. Thought his hair would never grow. Cured by Cuticura Remedies. Hair splendid and not a pimple on him.

I cannot say enough in praise of the CUTICURA REMEDIES. My boy, when one year of age, was so bad with eczema that he lost all of his hair. His scalp was covered with eruptions, which the doctors said was scald head, and that his hair would never grow again. Despairing of a cure from physicians I began the use of the CUTICARA REMEDIES, and, I am happy to say, with the most perfect success. His hair is now splendid, and there is not a pimple on him. I recommend the CUTICURA REMEDIES to mothers as the most speedy, economical, and sure cure for all skin diseases of infants and children, and feel that every mother who has an afflicted child will thank me for so doing.

A Fever Sore Eight Years Cured.

I must extend to you the thanks of one of my customers, who has been cured by using the CUTICURA REMEDIES, of an old sore, caused by a long spell of sickness or fever eight years ago. He was so bad he was fearful he would have to have his leg amputated, but is happy to say he is now entirely well,—sound as a dollar. He requests me to use his name, which is H. H. CASON, merchant of this place.

Severe Scalp Disease Cured.

A few weeks ago my wife suffered very much from a cutaneous disease of the scalp, and received no relief from the various remedies she used until she tried CUTICURA. The disease promptly yfelded to this treatment, and in a short while she was entirely well. There has been no return of the disease, and CUTICURA ranks No. 1 in our estimation for diseases of the skin.

THE MIDNIGHT CRY.

The young man stood at the parlor door.
And a nice young man was he;
Her father was up on the second floor,
And he weighed 103.

The house was filled with a solemn hush,
And the young man's heart with bliss
O'erflowed as the maid, with a modest blush,
Vouchsafed him a good-night kiss.

Then heavily down from the second floor
Came pa's sarcastic voice,
And cold sweat poured through every pore
Of his dearest daughter's choice.

For the old man said, "You tell that dude
To put on his hat and flee,
For when I'm excited I'm sometimes rude,
And I weigh 203."

The young man waited to hear no more;
He picked up his hat and fled,
And the father remained on the second floor,
And his daughter went to bed.

A Queer Find.

John Hastings tried to look pleasant when Mr. Chesley, his employer, askek him to watch the jewelry store that night, because the night watchman was sick.

You see, John had promised to take Marian Hinton to a concert that evening, a young lady whom he looked forward to making his wife some day. However, he saw no way to escape the duty, and after the clerks had gone away he lay down on a sofa in the office and fell asleep.

His dreams were rudely broken by feeling a hand at his throat, and a handkerchief impregnated with camphor pressed against his nostrils. He struggled to his feet, and a hand-to-hand encounter with the burglar insued. Then he was struck down, and knew no more until he saw Mr. Chesley and some of the clerks surrounding him. He was only a little bruised by the encounter of the night. At least the thief had been frightened away, and while he had taken nothing, had left a little bag of diamonds on the floor when he fled.

"I guess this belongs to you, John, as there doesn't seem to be any other claimant," said old Mr. Chesley.

But, alas! they were all pronounced to be paste, and John's momentary riches took to themselves wings and flew away after the quite to usual fashion.

He laughingly dubbed them the crown jewels, and poured them all into Marian's lap, with the remark that as such they should remain in the custody of the queen.

That demure little woman went into ecstacies over "the pretty jewels." There was just a touch of romance, too, in having a young hero, who had fought with robbers, come and lay his spoils at her feet, even if those spoils were only paste diamonds. One of the imitation gems was of great size and beauty. Sharply cut, of a light canary-yellow color and utterly without blemish, it was as pure as a ray of sun-light, but much more substantial, as it weighed a matter of 130 carats.

"I'll be hanged if I shouldn't believe that to be genuine, if it was only a little smaller," said old Mr. Chesley, as he held it up to the light. "But if there ever was a pure diamond of that size no one but an Eastern despot could afford to own it."

John had it set in a plain gold pin for Marian to wear in her hair and christened it the "Koh-i-nor."

"Oh, how lovely!" exclaimed all her admiring friends, when she appeared with it shining amid her rich brown tresses. "What a pity it isn't a real diamond." But at the same time they rejoiced exceedingly in the depths of their envious little souls that it wasn't "a real diamond."

The summer came, and the Koh-i-nor still flashed in the hair of its queenly little owner, but no more definite understanding was established between the donor and the wearer of the jewel. Jones still skirmished about the field of action, and by making sudden drshes within John's line of defense would carry off Marian as a prize to occasional parties and sociables.

One morning Hastings came down to the store with the Koh-i-nor in his hand. It had fallen upon the ballroom floor the preceding evening, and some one had stepped upon and crushed the setting. On the threshold he met Mr. Kurtz, the junior partner and diamond expert, who represented the "Co." portion of the firm name, and who had just returned from a year of travel and study of the great gem collections of Europe.

"What have you there?" asked Mr. Kurtz, as in shaking hands his eye caught the glitter of the Koh-i-nor.

"Nothing but a big paste diamond," replied John, handing it over for inspection.

"The duce it is!" said the expert as he turned it in the light. "I'll risk my reputation on its genuineness. It's worth $100,000 if it's worth a cent." And the sequel proved the accuracy of his judgement.

"I shall do nothing of the kind!" protested Marian, when John tried to make her take back the now almost priceless jewel. "I should be no better than a swindler obtaining money under false pretenses. You did not mean to give me $100,000 when you tossed what was supposed to be a worthless bauble into my lap."

In vain Hastings urged it upon her, said he should have given it to her just the saune if he had known it to be worth a million, and that it was hers by right of possession, since she had worn it nearly a year. The only sign of relenting which he could get was the suggestion, with a sly smile, that "we might share it between us."

"Not if the court knows itself," said John, as his arm slipped around a slender waist in his immediatc vicinity, without meeting any determined resistance. "I suppose I shall have to keep it, since you say it's mine; but I'll carry my point yet. I'm going to turn it into cash, and devote all the proceeds to supporting a little wife." And there being no dissenting voice, the motion was carried unanimously.

PORTLAND'S LADD-IE.

A correspondent of the East Oregonian has the following interesting description of the Portland Shylock:

Speaking of Ladd reminds me of passing that gentleman's residence the other evening just as the old man was entering. His carriage halted in the rear of his residence. A body servant who sits beside the driver, alighted, helped his charge to the ground and placed a pair of crutches under his arms. Slowly the old fellow dragged himself around to the front steps of his mansion. Every move seemed to cause him pain. His face gave unmistakable signs of suffering. When he finally reached the foot of the steps leading to the front doors, the servant brought him a wooden frame resembling a contrivance sometimes used to teach babies to walk. This was put over his head and the scent was made by placing the frame on the step and then crawling up while the body was supported by the arms, the frame being raised as each step was reashed. When at the top his crutches were again handed to him, the great double doors swung upon their hinges and the old millionaire disappeared. I stood there in front of that beautiful place and began to think and say to myself: "This man is worth millions of money and I am a poor son-of-a-gun. There is my faithful, hard-working little wife toasting herself over the stove preparing our frugal meal; there are three chubby little urchins with her and we are all poor. For their sakes how I would like to be rich. How I would dress them; how I would feed them; how happy I would make them!" Then I thought in another direction and says to myself: "Well, Mr. Ladd, you may have your great houses, and servants, and carriages; you may have your great acres annd herds; you may have your notes and mortgages, and stocks and bonds; you may have your tons of gold and silver. I'd rather be myself, just as I am, sound in body and limb, with six bits in my pocket, than have all your vast wealth and be compelled to teke with it your poor old paralyzed, worthless legs." This man is at his private desk in the back of his bank—Ladd & Tilton's bank belongs to W. S. Ladd; there is no Tilton connected with it now—from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. Every morning he is driven around town from 9 to 10, generally accompanied by his two little grandchildren. He invariably carries in his hands a number of sheets of paper upon which a memoranda of matters that are to be attended to before entering the office, are written. He often drives into the country to look at his farms and thoroughbred stock, on which occasions his favorite vehicle is a very common two-seated buckboard. He takes his morning drive in an open barouche, and is invariably accompanied by a pair of crutches and a body servant, and always drives fine, large horses. The greater part of his time at the office is spent in listening to the schemes and propositions of people who want money. He hears nothing, sees nothing and knows nothing but figures, money and interest. He has a very poor pair of legs but a remarkable head for business. His fortune is estimated at from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000. His oldest son, W. M. Ladd, is a chip off the old block.
