THE New Orleans mob has been outdone by one in Claiborne parish Louisiana, which took a handcuffed negro prisoner and burned him alive.

THE Knights of Reciprocity seems to have just met the wishes of a good many people, judging from the extremely rapid growth of the organization.

WHEN President Lincoln was assassinated Sir John MacDonald was the first foreigner to express sympathy. He caused the Canadian parliament to adjourn for the day.

SENATOR STAFFORD has too much common sense to be roped into accepting an empty presidential nomination from any third party, at least we think he has. And besides, he is too good a republican to allow his name to be used for any such purpose.

"We will sweep the country as the cyclone sweeps our Kansas prairies." So braggeth Pfeffer, the windy one, recently elected misfit senator from Kansas. The track of the cyclone is certainly an interesting and instructive sight—after the cyclone has passed.—Astorian.

TURKISH train robbers are a point or two ahead of the American article. They recently derailed an express train and held the passengers for a ransom of $40,000, and they got it. The money was advanced by the German Consul at Constantinople, but it is fair to presume that it will be repaid, with interest, by the Turkish government.

KENTUCKY statesmen of the democratic persuasion are devoting most of their time to explaining why, if the Kentuckians are so much in love with Cleveland, they should have at their state convention unanimously adopted Blackburn's anti-Cleveland resolution. Joe Blackburn isn't making any apologies, nor is Carlisle. They both hate Cleveland and they do not attempt to disguise their feelings.

How many of our democratic contemporaries will be honest enough to give the administration credit for the diplomatic victory it has won by persuading the British government to agree to its proposition for a cessation of the killing of the seals in Behring Sea? And how many of those which have been trying to make it appear that the president had repudiated Mr. Blaine's original proposition and was working upon his own ideas will be fair enough to state that the president did nothing of the sort, but took up the matter just where Mr. Blaine had left it and carried it through.

MANUFACTURERS are the life-blood of inland cities, and play no small part in the growth and wealth of great seaports. The Seattle Press-Times calls the attention of the Chamber of Commerce to the imports at that city, and points out its duty in looking to the establishment of concerns that can manufacture at home what is produced in places many miles distant. Portland's growth in population and wealth is in a great measure due to her advantages in this line, and it must be constantly added to maintain her position as the foremost north-western city. The Press-Times suggests that when men having money to invest come to the West an array of imports will show them just how great a market exists for the various lines of industry.

THE WAY TO SUCCEED.

There are men in the world who can never understand the success which attends the efforts of their prosperous neighbors. They see among them some men with no better start in life, no greater advantages and with no more energy or industry, succeeding where others fail; gaining in wealth, in position and in popular esteem, and for the life of them they cannot understand it. They attribute it, according to their mental attitude toward the successful man, either to luck or knavery. Generally they suppose it to be the result of truckling to the powerful, or to the lucky consequences of speculation, or to the persistent and unscrupulous pursuit of money. They are fond of seeking out hidden and secret tricks, which have no existence save in their own imaginations, and they hunt in the darkness for things which are plain in the open light of day. There are, in fact, few things in the world more clearly to be seen by those who will see them than the causes of success. Energy, industry, fidelity and economy tend to success, as a matter of course, but these are not sufficient. The business of the civilized world is so complex now, and the relations of all men so interlaced with one another, that mere selfishness, however wisely it acts, cannot attain any great measure of success for its votary. The successful man must make friends, and to do this he must show himself friendly to all men, and particularly to all the enterprise which men undertake in masses. He must not only have a quick and full sympathy with all that helps the community in which he lives, but he must actively aid it and help it. The man who does this will be helped by others. People will find his presence pleasant to them, and his words and his work useful. They will reciprocate his efforts. If he is a merchant they will trade with him, if a professional man they will employ him, and if a politician they will vote for him. Such men become a part of everything, and by aiding everything, secure a profit from everything. It is a mere question of working for men and with men, instead of working against them. There is no patent on this process of making money, nor does it require any capital to go into the business. It requires only that a man shall be genuinely glad to hear of another man's success, and always ready to promote anything and everything that will help the community in its onward and upward progress. Men who follow this course will attain success. They will have an increase of wealth, of friendship and of influence, while the merely selfish citizen will be plodding slowly in the mud of his own selfishness without any chance of getting out of it. Of course the successful man will have to take the consequences of his prosperity and submit the criticisms of prurient spitefulness. When he assists in any enterprise he will be charged with having "boodle" in it, and when he advocates some plan for the public good he will be accused of seeking notoriety. But what do these criticisms amount to? Coming from men who envy every man's prosperity and from those who take no interest in the community at large, they will fall unheeded upon the ears of the world, for no man cares for the praise or regrets the censure of such critics. The success of being friendly, therefore, is worth seeking for. It is worth while from every point of view to stand in with your neighbors, to help your city, to join its public organizations and to give support to every undertaking that adds to its welfare. He who does this cannot possibly fail, for he has joined his fortunes with those of the whole city in which he lives, and with it and its people he has formed a partnership in prosperity which no adversity can destroy.

THE CURSE OF CREDIT.

One of the curses of our country to-day is the credit system, and some day, when it is too late, we will find it out to our sorrow. If there were no such thing as credit our people would all be better off, families would have more and be much better contented. We should have a cash basis for everything. If this was put into effect we would have no such thing as paupers, and there would be no stringency in the money market. We know of people who live a year ahead because they can buy on credit.—Fairhaven Herald.

CHARACTER OF THE MOSSBACK.

Did you ever notice that those persons who are always opposing public improvements are not the most successful men in business? Instead of using their energies to advance their interests and the interests of the public, they spend them in jealous foreboding and hateful feeling toward those who are prosperous.—Eastern Oregon Republican.

REPORTS from California are to the effect that the prune crop will be very light. This refers to the crop on the trees and not to that which will be shipped east next fall from Oregon and be sold as California prunes. Californians seem to possess that typical rule that works both ways. They steal our fruit and tack their own name to it, and in the salmon trade they steal our name to tack upon their fish. It is time our State Board of Trade made some effort to protect Oregon products in Eastern markets.—Oregonian.

TO-DAY, in Buenos Ayres, a man who has a gold dollar can get $3.25 in paper money for it. The Farmers' Alliance idea of "government" printing "cheap money" has had two years of full sway among our misguided South American friends of the Argentine republic, and the result is that when they go to market they carry a basket to hold wads of money, and a little purse in which to put the provisions purchased.

A suggestion. If you are troubled with rheumatism or a lame back allow us to suggest that you try the following simple remedy: Take a piece of flannel the size of the two hands, saturate it with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bind it on over the seat of pain. It will produce a pleasant warmth and relieve you of all pain. Many severe cases have been cured in this way. The Pain Balm can be obtained from T. Graham, druggist.

A SCROFULOUS BOY.

Running Sores Covered His Body and Head—His Bones Affected. Cured by Cuticura Remedies.

When six months old, the left hand of our little grandchild had a large boil. We poulticed it, but all to no purpose. About five months after it became a running sore. Soon other sores formed. He then had two of them on each hand, and as his blood became more and more impure, it took less time for them to break out. A sore came on the chin, beneath the under which was very offensive. His head was one solid scab, discharging a great deal. This was his condition at twenty-two months old when I undertook the care of him, his mother having died when he was a little more than a year old, of consumption (scrofula of course.) He could walk a little, but could not get up if he fell down and could not move when in bed, having no use of his hands. I immediately commenced with the CUTICURA REMEDIES, using all freely. One sore after another healed, a bony matter forming in each one of these five deep ones just before healing, which would finally grow loose and were taken out; then they would heal rapidly. One of these ugly bone formations I preserved. After taking a dozen and a half bottles he was completely cured, and is now, at the age of six years, a strong and healthy child.
