A little daughter of Albert Bronell, aged about 12 years, took a childish freak last Friday, says the Albany Herald, and ran away. She had been going to school, but at noon instead of returning to her books at the public school, took the Oregon Pacific train toward Yaquina. She was accidentally met at Summit by friends, who, finding her alone, telegraphed to her alarmed parents, and yesterday the little girl was returned safely home.

No Hop Lice Yer .- F. L. Washburn, entomologist at the state experiment station (Corvallis), in speaking of the hop louse scare started this early in the season, says the insects reported as hop lice proved to be not the hop louse at all, but members of the family Rhizobunæ, root lice found in the soil, preferably in moist, clayey soil, clustered on roots of sorrel, grasses, etc., and even on the roots of fruit trees, which latter habit and the fact that a white, mealy secretion is found plentifully where they are present gives rise to a belief that they are woolly aphis. They do not in the least menace the agriculturist, least of all the hop growers. Prof. Washburn adds: "Let hop growers rest easy as regards this 'stem mother' This insect is not phrodon humuli and calls for no attention. Not until the leaves are well out need we look for the hop louse. Then let the would-be-successful grower prepare his spray pump and his kerosene emulsion or quassia or soap mixture."

B F Jones, of Toledo, W H Parker, of Yaquina, and Virgil Waters, of Yaquina, were placed in nomination. Here a motion was made and carried that it take a majority of all the votes cast to elect. There being no election, the second ballot resulted as follows: Skipton, 20; Alexander, 49; McCarty, 4; Elliott, 19. There seemed to be a determination on the part of the convention to lay their old wheel horse, Skipton, who has held this office for many years, on the shelf for the future, and they succeeded in doing so. For the office of school superintendent E

L Bryan was placed in nomination and was elected the nominee by acclamation. For the office of commissioner another hard fight was had. Corvallis had captured the plum of the convention in securing the fat offices and the delegates from the outlying districts made a determined fight for this office as a last resort to secure all that was left for them. Peter Rickard, Wm Wakefield, Mr McMullaney, N P Slate and Marsh

Although Jesse Spencer and W S McFadden were placed in nomination for this important office, the Dr. was declared the unanimous choice of the convention by the consent and withdrawal of the opposing candidates.

Paul tells the following, and vouches for the truth of it: One night recently he locked his barn up as usual with his horse, a well-grown animal, inside. In the morning, when the barn was again unlocked, the horse was nowhere in sight; the lock on the door had not been tampered with, yet the horse was gone. In the rear of the barn was a small hole cut in the wall about two feet square. On examining the On motion, the names of the persons re- edges of this opening a few hairs were found sticking to the boards. The exercises at both instituaddress at the college exercises was that we, having a grand inheritance of ancient forest trees planted by nature, should utilize and not waste them, and we should likewise, plant and foster new growth that our children's children should bless our memory when we are gone, Mr. Nash made a feeling allusion to our lamented Senator Canthorn, who originated the legislative bill that gave to Oregon its Arbor day. Besides the exercises at the school and college, which were thronged, later in the afternoon the members of the Episcopal church met for the purpose of planting trees on the west side of the church "to beautify the House of God," after which Miss Snell opened her hospitable doors to an afternoon
