reproduction of the one before which Columbus knelt, and a split cross erected byhim on Guanahai at his first landing. Carefully arranged under glass, you will seedocuments and letters, once the property of Columbus, now in possession of the Duke of Veragua, who kindly loaned them to the managers of the Fair. Here is the original of the contract with the sovereigns of Spain, the commission issued to him creating him "Admiral of the Ocean Seas." "Gentlemen will remove their hats to show their reverence for the age of the document'" may be read on a little piece of paper pinned to the above document. The suggestion is generally carried out.

In another part of the room may be seen his letters to Isabella, before and after the discovery of America; there is a letter from: Francis Rolden-that fatal document, the
