Walter Chedic, a Carson (Nev.) business man, in an open letter advocates the building of a railroad from Carson to the Sacramento river through Carson, Fredericksburg and Diamond valley, around the south end of Lake Tahoe, through Lake valley, then over the hill to Strawberry, down the American river to Placerville and from there to the Sacramento river, putting the state in direct communication with the ocean and making Nevada a competitive point. He advocates the building of a road by the state by the issuance of 3 per cent bonds for $3,000,000, redeemable in 50 years, with the governor, controller, treasurer, surveyor general and attorney general as the board of directors. He advocates the formation of a new party, electing legislators on a platform which inflicts the death penalty on all who sell out to competing roads. He would make the governor superintendent, with the power to appoint an assistant. He would fix the passenger rate at $5 for a round-trip ticket to San Francisco, half a cent a pound the freight rate and $10 for a carload.
