GOING HOME.

Heimgang! So the German people Whisper, when they hear the bell Tolling from some gray old steeple, Death's familiar tale to tell; When they hear the organ dirges Swelling out from the chapel dome And the singers' chanting surges, "Heimgang!" Always going home.

Heimgang! Quaint and tender saying, In the grand old German tongue. That hath shaped Melanchthon's pray

And the hymn that Luther sung; Blessed our loving Maker, That is where our feet shall roam. Still we journey towards "God's Acre' "Heimgang!" Always going home

Heimgang! We are all so weary; And the willows as they wave, Softly sighing, sweetly dreary, Woo us to the tranquil grave: When the golden pitcher's broken, With its dregs or with its foam, And the tender words are spoken, "Heimgang?" We are going home

As for dress, Billy can scarcely be called a dude, though there is time enough yet for that. He just won't wear a coat in warm weather, and one suspender is nearly always shorter than the other, which gives his clothes a "hitched-up" appearance which is quite comical. He does not use the most correct language in speaking, as will be apparent before this story is done, but has a direct way of speakmost fastidious scholar. He does naughty things sometimes. He robs birds' nests, he dispises to go to Sunday school, he will not learn Bible ing. And so the sunflower said: "All those who favor this motion will say sure as to this. It seemed to please vote yea." There was quite a respectable vote at this; "all who are come from the winter cabbages. At opposed, nay," said Mrs. Sunflower. Children, I almost blush to tell it! that horrible horseradish actually neighed! As might have been expected, there was a grunt of disapproval from the pigweed, who early in the spring would have taken the whole garden if it had not been for Billy's hoe, and there was a growl and bowthe proceedings. When I see him going along the road whistling-he is Possibilities and probabilities of import so great that we may well pause and reflect-the destinies of ome, church, state, yes, of a world, hang upon the future of boys like that. But I must not moralize, but go on with this story. It was only 10 o'clock when Billy set his basket down by a fine hill of potatoes; and as he knew that there was plenty of time, he leisurely stretched himself in the shade under a tree for a short respite.

There were all kinds of vegetables in the garden. It was indeed a regular "truck patch," as his father called it, and most of the vegetables were large and fine. But there were ouite number of weeds scattered here and there, as there is apt to be late in the season. Billy knowing that his father was in the habit of taking vegetables to the Oregon state fair, looked around wondering how many premiums would be his this year, and just what particular vegetables would be put on exhibition. Bordering along the fence and in the corners were several hollyhocks and sunflowers. What was his surprise to see a large, tall sunflower bowing and nodding in a most astonishing manher, while from its luminous face proceeded as queer a voice as Billy had ever heard. In perfectly awful astonishment he heard these words from the great yellow sunflower: "Fellow vegetables," (now Billy did not believe for one moment that that sunflower was a "fellow vegetable.") The sunflower proceeded, "The hour having arrived for us to discuss matters relative to the future important position which some of us will no doubt hold at the Oregon state fair, I hope that each one of you will, in a calm, dignified and impartial manner, discuss his or her respective claims for a premium. It is just barely possible that the general public will not agree with you, and it is almost absolutely certain that the committees will not; nevertheless, I should like an expression from you, and also from some of the the more thrifty weeds,, especially those who are in the habit of constant association with us. Of course, they are not at all likely to be placed upon exhibition, but believing as we do in the science of evolution, equal rights, eternal progress and the McKinley bill, we would like an expression from them, for it is quite possible that future generations will discover their virtues and bring them before the public as benefactors of the race." At this there seemed to be general nodding and waving of approval from all the vegetables and weeds. A casual ob- out.
