LIFE BEFORE THEM.

The State Agricultural College on Monday closed a most successful year. It is an institution worthy of patronage by young men and women, and especially by those who wish to prepare themselves for mechanical and agricultural pursuits or for home duties. Fifty-one graduates for the year and very large classes in the other three years of the course shows that the institution is being appreciated, and it is expected that the college will open next fall with a greatly increased attendance.

Fifty-one young men and women step out from college life to enter upon practical duties—to become men and women in the busy world. They have had a splendid opportunity to fit themselves for earning a livelihood. It is presumed that they have not neglected this opportunity or else they would not have received the diplomas that are a mark of their mastery of the prescribed course of studies. It is a matter of self-congratulation to them that their application and studiousness have won for them the coveted prize. They should be grateful to the institution that has made possible this acquisition of knowledge at such a small cost. Many of the graduates came to Corvallis practically without funds, but the institution is so managed that any energetic young man or woman who has ability and willingness to learn need have no fear of not getting through if they keep their health, though their finances be exceedingly low. These graduates owe it to the college to help it in every way possible, and there is no doubt that they will do so. They ought also to remember that the federal government has made it possible for them to obtain their education at a nominal cost, and in appreciation of this it becomes especially incumbent upon the graduates, as citizens, to be at all times true and loyal, ready at any time to sacrifice their personal interests for those of their country and the perpetuity of its grand and ennobling principles.

A college graduating class may properly be divided into two parts. One, as a result of having finished a four-year course, believes that it knows it all; the other, the thoughtful, careful part, realizes that it knows but little, and has yet much to learn. For the former there is little hope of advancement; for the latter, every hope. On leaving college, if he has been attentive to his work, the graduate has acquired a smattering of knowledge that will be of benefit to him; but of infinitely more worth to him is the habit of method in study that he has become accustomed to while pursuing a prescribed course. If the graduate has formed the habit of attention to detail, of always being sure of solid ground to stand upon as a base for further advance in life's battle, he will be well repaid for the time and expense of his course.

Another valuable result of college life has been the social and civic lessons that he has learned. He has found it to be a social world in itself, and, before graduation, has learned that no one lives entirely to himself. During his college course consideration for others, public spirit, magnanimity and other civic virtues, should have had a full and hearty development, else his college training has to a great extent been a failure.

The class of '95 with its twenty-five young men and twenty-six young women carry with it the best wishes of the citizens of this city. In it are some splendid specimens of the strength and intelligence of the American youth, and we hope that all may, and feel assured that some of them at least will, attain position and eminence, and that they will become honest, loyal American citizens.

If the secretary of the treasury were to investigate the importation of prison-made goods, instead of touting for a third term for President Cleveland, his idle time would be employed to the better advantage of the people who pay him.

SOMETHING said by Postmaster General Wilson, in his commencement address at the University of Mississippi, at Oxford, in that state, is sure to attract attention. It was: "I long to see the south again in national leadership." Of course the students and faculty applauded.

THE Cleveland convention of republican clubs demonstrates the fact that the national convention of the party will necessarily adopt a platform that will meet with the favor of a great majority of silver republicans. The silver element at Cleveland practically dictated the resolution that finally passed, although their strength was inconsiderable as compared with that which they will possess in the general republican convention. The Cleveland delegates represented principally the cities and larger towns of the nation where the influence of money-lenders and bankers is the greatest, so that the silver leaders were somewhat handicapped, and the fact that they were really the dominating spirit of the gathering proves the general and governing strength of the silver idea.

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

It is this country is to be preserved, and its institutions perpetuated, the spirit of patriotism must be continually renewed and vitalized by cultivation of the sentiments proper to patriotism by recalling the memories of our beginnings as a nation, and of the struggles and sacrifices necessary for establishment of this great and glorious fabric. It was the profound remark of one of the world's greatest thinkers and most practical statesmen that a people that does not look back to its ancestors will never look forward for its posterity. The question for every American citizen is, "What are we to leave our descendants?"

The history of our early struggles as a people, with its lessons of courage, fortitude and virtue, is the perennial fountain of inspiration for patriotism through succeeding ages. This history, with its great examples of courageous character, should be kept before us as a living picture. The minds and characters of our children should be formed upon it. Only so can we know what a work it was to form this nation, and from this to give them the lesson that what was gained through such labors is worth your utmost efforts to preserve.

Without the spirit that makes patriots, this country and this system of ours, favored though we are above all other peoples, will not stand. Numbers and wealth alone can never constitute nations or preserve states. Real strength lies only in moral forces, and the moral forces that are necessary to create a nation are equally necessary for its preservation. Some of our people begin to talk about observance of the day of national independence as a bore, the Fourth of July as a nuisance—manifestations of patriotic ardor as annoyances to which quiet citizens should not be subjected. They wouldn't give a dollar to have a parade and make a noise; the Fourth of July is played out; the words of patriotism are an unmeaning jargon. Such are not living citizens. They are dead already, and ought to be under ground. They have forgotten their ancestry and care not for their posterity.

We need a lively and vigorous celebration of the Fourth of July all over this land; if for nothing else, to wake these citizens out of their sleep of death. But we need it, moreover, to recall us all to the lessons and demands of patriotic duty. It is business—business in the highest sense. It is one of the means of keeping the sacred flame aglow upon the altar of our country's life and destiny. The American who would vote the Fourth of July a bore is a man of no country, and should be warned of consequences that may fall on the heads of his children.—Oregonian.

A LARGE HOP YARD.

Friday a GAZETTE representative received an invitation from W. A. Wells to drive out into the country a couple of miles and look over the hop fields of which Mr. Wells and Mr. Mackay are the owners. The invitation was accepted, and, behind Mr. Wells' Alta-go filly, we soon reached our destination. The fields comprise fifty acres, and are located a short distance southeast of the Prier Scott farm. The hop roots were planted something over a year ago. They are now in excellent condition and prospects are most favorable for a yield of 800 pounds per acre, which is considered above the average for the second season. The land whereon the hops are growing is a rich sandy loam, located along the bottoms adjoining Mary's river and is subject to overflow. There are no bad effects attributable to these freshets, however, but on the contrary prove extremely beneficial to the land. The overflow is merely a backwater and leaves upon the land a thick deposit of sediment which is said to possess fertilizing qualities which are said to be unsurpassed.

Chinamen are engaged in cultivating the hops. In fact they are for the present the real proprietors, having a ten-year lease on the land. By the terms of this lease the Chinamen are required to plant the hops and care for them until the expiration of the ten years. In addition they are to complete the clearing and grubbing of considerable land which is also to be planted with hops as rapidly as possible. For their pay the Chinamen receive during the life of the lease three-fourths of the crop. Or in other words, they are to deliver one-fourth of the crop, baled, in Corvallis each year free of expense to the lessees. However, Messrs. Wells and Mackay furnish the hop roots, poles and driers.

Work on the new drier is now nearing completion. It will have ten furnaces, and is what is known as a double drier. The main building is 26x52 feet with 24-foot posts. The baling room adjoining is 20x52 feet, with a store room the same size on the second floor. The furnace rooms are to be hard finished, and the building throughout will be a model one. The estimated combined capacity of the ten driers is from 350 to 400 boxes every 24 hours. That splendid judgment was displayed in the selection of a site for the drier is at once noticeable. It is built against a steep hillside and so arranged that when the hops are hauled in from the fields for drying they are conveyed on a level to the drying room, thus avoiding the trouble and expense of an elevator. When dried the hops are easily dumped into the store room ten or twelve feet below. Here, again, they are easily handled into the baler, located on the floor below, from where the bales are loaded onto wagons on a plane with the main floor. Thus the work is facilitated and no lifting is required during the entire process of drying, baling, and loading for market. It is without doubt the best built and most conveniently arranged drier in the country if not in the entire valley. It is expected that in order to care for the crop another season it will be necessary to construct ten additional driers.

In the arrangement of things nothing has been forgotten—even to a spacious cellar wherein will be kept all kinds of liquid refreshments for visitors, and which will be doled out in liberal quantities by Sir William to his many friends. Fortunately for Bill, but unfortunately for the GAZETTE man, the cellar had not at the time of our visit been stocked with drinkables. A promise was exacted, however, that no such condition will exist on any future visit.

THE CELEBRATION.

Assurances for the success of the coming celebration in this city are becoming more flattering each day. The sports announced for the day are meeting with popular favor, and for a week past a crowd of enthusiastic young men have been in constant training with a view to entering the different contests. These events include bicycle races for both boys and men, foot races, pole vault, putting 16 pound shot, throwing the hammer, tug of war, catching greased pig and climbing greased pole. Several entries for these events have already been made, and it is expected that all the sports will be participated in by an unusually large number of contestants. Instead of awarding cash prizes for some of the contests the general committee has made arrangements for one silver and three gold medals. The silver medal is valued at $10 and the gold ones at $25 each. The former will be awarded to the winner of the boy's bicycle race, and the other two winners in the following events: one hundred-yard handicap, and 440-yard handicap and 440 yard bicycle race. The medals are beautifully engraved, and in the opinion of the committee will create more rivalry and will be more appreciated by the winners than cash prizes. All of the sports will be under the management of a special committee of well known members of the sporting fraternity. The personnel of the committee is Robert Johnson, chairman, R. H. Huston, Virgil Watters and M. H. Kriebel.

The general committee is especially anxious that the business men decorate their respective places of business. This will give the town a holiday appearance, and if there is a united effort in the matter the decorations even at a very small outlay can be made to eclipse those of former years.

The ball at Hoskins Friday night was a grand success in every way. There will be another the 4th.

The new church is going up very rapidly. Last Tuesday the ladies prepared an excellent dinner for the workmen, which was highly enjoyed and appreciated by all.

NIP AND TUCK.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Like a Sieve.

The chief function of the kidneys is to separate from the blood, in its passage through them, of certain impurities and watery particles which make their final exit through the bladder. The retention of these, in consequence of inactivity of the kidneys, is productive of Bright's disease, dropsy, diabetes, albuminuria and other maladies with a fatal tendency. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a highly sanctioned diuretic and blood purifier, impels the kidneys when inactive to renew their sifting function, and strain from the vital current impurities which infect it and threaten their own existence as organs of the body. Catarrh of the bladder, gravel and retention of the urine are also maladies arrested or averted by this benign promoter and restorative of organic action. Malaria, rheumatism, constipation, biliousness and dyspepsia also yield to the Bitters, which is also speedily beneficial to the weak and nervous.
