Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

A BIG SALT MINE.

STORIES OF THE DAY.

Development of a New California Industry.

Articles of incorporation have been filed by the "Crystal Rock Salt Mining Co." of San Francisco, with a capital stock of $500,000, of which $237,000 have been subscribed by Chas. G. Horn, Sanford Bennett, Meyer Wis, Julius Reimer, S. Lewis, L. R. and Ben Lewis.

The Crystal Rock Salt Mine is situated in San Bernardino county, and produces a salt of superior quality, which, according to analysis made by Professor L. Falkenau, of the State say Office in San Francisco, is found to be chemically pure. At the instance Norton, Teller & Roden, and other in Francisco houses, a number of tests were made, with the result that the salt produced from this mine has been found to be equal to the best English salt in the market for butter making, and for meat and fish packing, and for all other purposes.

The lump salt stock from this mine is preferred by the large cattle companies to any other salt, by reason of its purity, dryness and solidity; also because it is the most economical for stock feeding. Owing to its firmness and purity it does not deliquesce when used out on the ranges.

The company controls over 1,000 acres of mining ground in which the salt is mined from large deposits, as far and transparent as crystals. The mine is connected with Salt Rock Station (Danby) on the Atlantic & Pacific R. by a road extending thirty-two miles, especially constructed by the action Engine Company, and upon which the company successfully operates a train of traction engine and engines, constructed by the Best Manufacturing Company of San Leandro, Cal.

The company is about to commence the erection of extensive works at the mine, and upon their completion will be enabled to supply the purest salt produced for butter-making, table salt, meat and fish-packing. Lump salt stock-feeding and milling purposes now being shipped.

The buildings at the mine are constructed of salt, and the company is out to erect an office building at the road station out of rock salt, which will attract great attention. Passengers on the train passing this station now in the habit of getting off the train for the purpose of securing crystals of salt as keepsakes.

In the sunlight a building constructed of this salt appears as if it was covered with diamonds.

THE WEED IN KANSAS.

Newton Has a Ladies' Smoking Club Called the Sparrow.

The only ladies' smoking club known to exist in Kansas has just been discovered in Newton and is named the Sparrow. The Sparrows have a select club-house, elegantly fitted up with the most luxurious furnishings, including divans, sofas, and all the paraphernalia of a smokers' club. There are books and periodicals, but it is in no sense a literary club. It is composed exclusively of young women, the number being limited to nine.

When one member marries or leaves the city, another lady is elected to fill the vacancy, and it is said there are always several applications awaiting action. It was only by accident that this exclusive secret association was discovered, but it has been in existence for a long time. The room belonging to the sparrows is on Main street and is a genuine clubroom. All its members are included in Newton's "swell set."—St. Louis Republic.

What Congressmen Read.

"What books are the most popular with the new congressmen?" I asked a bookseller.

"Books on etiquette," he answered. "The demand is so great we cannot fill it. We sold 30 such books yesterday, and I have today sent a large order to my publishers, for at this rate my stock will soon be exhausted."—Washington Post.

Perfume Manufacture.

England manufactures perfumes on a very large scale, importing many of the materials from other countries, but also making a large use of home-grown herbs and flowers.

Controls an Empire.

The South Africa Company, controlled by Cecil Rhodes and his associates, was a territory larger than France, Germany, Austria and Italy combined in five times the area of California.

Number of Hairs in a Beard.

A Pottstown barber has found a new occupation for spare moments. He has counted the number of hairs in a man's beard and shaved. When the barber shaved which had been used in shaving was not difficult, although tedious, to count the hairs, which numbered 12, 2.—Philadelphia Record.

IMPERIAL MILLIONS

By JULIAN HAWTHORNE

(Copyright, 1891, by American Press Association.)

"Dear sir," it ran, "I have, of course, heard of your loss, and I can say, without fear of your misunderstanding me, that it interested me. Let me also remark that the reward you offer would not be acceptable to me, even were I to become entitled to them. But, as you may easily imagine, my mind, since our last meeting, has not been entirely at ease; and if I were able to forward your efforts in this affair I should feel justified in hoping that any hostile designs you may have against me would undergo some modification. It is for this reason that I address you. I do not wish to exaggerate the value of the information I possess—it may lead to nothing. But, at any rate, I believe I have come into possession of something that may turn out a clew; and if you will call at my house alone at noon tomorrow I will tell you what it is. I must stipulate, however, that you show this letter to no one, nor intimate that you have received it, for I will not run the risk of being forestalled or interfered with in the matter. You can, of course, disregard this letter if you choose, or you can attempt to draw my secret from me by force; but if you know me well you will do neither of these things, but accept my invitation under the conditions that I have imposed."

There might, no doubt, be personal danger to the count in going to this rendezvous. Sallie Matchin and he were on terms of deadly enmity, and nothing would suit her better than to draw him out of the way. Going alone to her house he might easily fall into a fatal ambush; for, perilous though it would be to commit violence upon a man of his social prominence, Sallie was a desperate woman and was capable of anything.

If he hesitated, however, it was by no means on account of any considerations as to his own safety. If he had known that he was going to certain death he would still have been prompt to the point, for he was a man of honor, and he was sure that Olympia had been placed in safety. But this was very far from certain. The "clew" might be merely a bait to draw him to destruction; and his destruction, so far from benefiting Olympia, might remove the only chance remaining to her to escape. And since no one was to know on what errand he had gone, the chances were against his fate being discovered.

Nevertheless, after weighing all considerations, he resolved to go. He had, however, the only one that had offered itself. Were he to neglect it he might regret it forever. The only precaution he took was to place a revolver in his pocket, and at twelve o'clock the next day he rang the bell at Sallie Matchin's door.

Sallie, of course, was far too clever to think of attempting to influence her visitor by accentuating the seductiveness of her beauty. She had already experienced the ill success of such an effort, and even had it been otherwise a man in an agony about one woman is not in humor to be attracted by another, apart from the question of previous enmity. But Sallie enjoyed her beauty on her own account, and took pleasure in adorning it. So the tiger seemed to feel a pride in her glossy stripes and the coral snake in its gaudy scales. This woman had never felt so sweet a satisfaction with herself and her prospect as when she bade her visitor welcome that day; and she looked as she felt. At the first glance there seemed to emanate from her the pure bloom and freshness of May itself; but as one looked more closely he became conscious of something behind this innocent and balmy aspect which was as poisonous and cruel as sin. The rich, glowing color, the queenly grace, the dark, dauntless eyes, the smiling, curving lip, the sparkle of a jewel here and there, and a certain oriental luxuriance of costume and demeanor, all contributed to render her a splendid, pestiferous creature, such as the women of medieval Italy might have been, or Cleopatra. There she stood, like a queen in her kingdom; and she greeted the count with a smile of pleasure so bright and spontaneous that, had he been in a mood to speculate about it, he might have imagined she was glad to see him for his own sake.

"I am heartily glad to see you, Count de Lisle," she said. "I thought it even chances that you did not come. You evidently have no courage. Shall I clap my hands and let the assassins spring forth upon you?" She actually did clap her hands as she spoke, and at the signal the curtains in a doorway at the upper part of the room parted, and in came—not a band of assassins, but—a pretty French maid-in-waiting, with the Russian Samovar on a tray. Sallie watched her guest under her eyelashes, but he did not even turn his head to see who entered. He was turned by so frigid a manner. I must get what meat there is out of it; or, if you cannot spare the time and patience, you can always get it and go away. But I give you fair warning that I will not tell you what you want to know until I have told you everything I want you to hear."

"Perhaps, you had better give me some assurance, in the first place, that you can tell me what I want to know." Sallie hesitated a moment, and her hand moved toward a box on the table. But she withdrew it and said: "No, I will not do even that. You think me unreasonable, of course, but I can't help it; I must conduct this affair in my own way or not at all."

This whitening pretense of feminine fussiness in the face of a situation so grim and tragic had a certain informal humor about it that almost made the count laugh. It was as if she were to protest that it would quite make her head ache to murder a man with a carrying knife; an Italian point of the Fifteenth century was the only instrument she could think of operating with.

"Go on, then," he said. "There is a limit, but I hope, on all accounts, you won't transcend it. Recollect that I, too, am desperate!"

"Come, that is a bond of sympathy at any rate," exclaimed Sallie, in a musical warble. "Now we chat together cosily!"

CHAPTER XVIII.
OVER A CUP OF TEA.

A pen was put in his hand, and he affixed his signature to each document.

"You must not expect from me any attempt to return you an equivalent for your hospitality," remarked Sallie, as she gracefully began the brewing of the tea. "I haven't the material nor the ingenuity. There is not so much as an assassin on the premises, not to speak of magic mirrors and oriental enchanters, and beautiful spectacles. By the way, that was a wonderfully clever trick. How was it done?"

"You must ask Garcia," replied the count, quietly, as one who had made up his mind to endure up to a certain point, and no more.

"Do you think Garcia would tell me any secret of yours?" said Sallie. She gave the question a flavor of arch surprise that sent the count on a swift journey of expectation. After all, why had Garcia left him? He began to surmise a possible reason, but he said only, "I have always found him a useful man. Of course I know he has his weaknesses."

"Yes; so have we all," she replied. "Even the Count de Lisle has weaknesses. And yet, it seems to me, were I in your place I would have none. No man ever had a greater opportunity than you. If you stood for yourself alone, what could you not do? No one could attack you. You could buy friends, police, juries, judges and legislatures. You could make laws and elect rulers. You could yourself be the real ruler of this country and hold the balance of power in the world. With genius and purpose and such wealth as yours all that would not be impossible. But, then, you must make sacrifices. You must be solitary. If you give your confidence to a friend or your heart to a woman you are vulnerable and can be overthrown. When I first learned who and what you were I feared you. Here is a man, I said to myself, who from having a rope around his neck, has risen to power incalculable. The world has done its worst to him; he will have his revenge upon the world. The iron has entered into his soul, and now his soul will be like iron. He must be obeyed, for he can enforce obedience. But when I heard of your visit to Sallie, suddenly changing from this serious vein to a light and bantering tone, 'that the Count de Lisle was in love and about to be married I did not fear him so much. To have attempted to overthrow you by questioning the means that had obtained your wealth would have been a desperate enterprise. Even robbers and murderers, if they be strong and resolute enough, need fear nothing. But to have given your heart to a girl—that was another matter! You could be reached through her."

"And you? Are you impregnable?" asked he.

"Only in so far that if I saw my way to accomplish what I supremely desire I would let nothing deter me. I was an innocent little girl once, but even then I had strong desires, and without any opportunity to carry them out. I made some serious mistakes, and suffered from them, but I had had my way, and I found that most failures in this world are due to not having been unscrupulous enough. It needs courage to begin, but when you discover what it is to be without scruples you wonder why anybody is controlled by them. They are the great slaveholders of the human race. But I was going to say that I should be willing to put in your hands any evidence against myself that you might require for my destruction rather than forego the purpose I have in view."

"What is your purpose?"

"The poets say that love is lord of all, you know. I have had my doubts of that, and I want you to settle them. You think you love Olympia Raven. How much would you be willing to sacrifice to love her?"

"That is a hypothetical question. I could answer it only after I was made certain that her life was in danger."

"Whether she lives or dies depends upon the result of this interview. She is in my power—as the people in melodrama say. What becomes of her depends on my will."

The count, who had been sitting with his elbows on his knees and his eyes lowered, looked up, and his glance and Sallie's met. What she saw in his mind sent a quick flush to her face. For a moment she held her breath. No soldier in battle was ever nearer death than Sallie then. But she had a resolute heart, and when she drew her breath again it was with a smile.

"Do you always carry a revolver?" she asked. "We are alone in the house, except my maid. I could have protected myself, but I am sufficiently protected by circumstances. It has been arranged that if anything happens to me Olympia will not long survive me."

The Pastor Scored One.

It was in a Caribbean church that the choir did not put in an appearance at the opening hour. The pastor arose, glanced at the empty choir seats and said: "I see the singers are absent this morning. Let all arise and sing, 'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow.'"

A DYING SPARK

Stop Right Now! Don't Light Another! You're Burning Your Brains.

WRECKS ALONG THE STREETSIDE

Of-time tobacco's victims look at the dying spark in the cigar stump or at the big masticated "chaw" of tobacco just expected, and with nerves nicotineized with tobacco, mentally resolve, "Now, that is my last, I will never use it again. I know that it is injuring me physically and financially and my nerves are becoming so irritated that I can't stand the least annoyance." What is the result? These good resolutions are generally made, while the effect of the use of tobacco practically paralyzes the cravings of millions of irritated nerve centers and just as soon as the effects commence to pass away these good resolutions weaken, showing conclusively that the use of tobacco is not a habit but a disease of the nervous system caused by the education of the nerves to crave for the nicotine poisoning. What then is the easy, permanent, natural way to relieve yourself of the use of tobacco? Certainly not by discontinuing it and suffering the nervous reaction and prostrating effects and mental degeneracy sure to follow the long and continued use of tobacco. Does it not suggest itself to you that the natural thing to do is to take a remedy that is specifically prepared to eradicate the effects of nicotine in the system and to overcome the nerve cravings and restore the tobacco irritated nerves to a normal and healthy condition? To this, we say, "Yes, we are glad to say, and the way to live up to it is to take the

The sale of No-To-Bac within the past few years has assumed enormous proportions, almost entirely depleted upon its merits and the recommendations of the cured. So great is the sale that it is hardly possible to go into any leading drug store without finding it on sale, and the drug has nothing but words of praise to give it.

"Do you call her complexion real?" "De- cidedly. It has hardly a suggestion of the ideal school." The resemblance, furthermore, did not seem to be in it all.

CONSUMPTION CURED

AN ABSOLUTE REMEDY FOR ALL PULMONARY COMPLAINTS.

T. A. Slocum Offers to Send Two Bottles Free of His Remedy to Cure Consumption and All Lung Troubles—An Ellixir of Life.

Nothing could be fairer, more philanthropic or carry more joy in its wake than the offer of T. A. Slocum, M. C., of 183 Pearl street, New York. Perfectly confident that he has an absolute remedy for the cure of consumption and all pulmonary complaints, he offers through this paper to send two bottles free to any reader who is suffering from lung trouble or consumption, also loss of flesh and all conditions of wasting. He invites those desirous of obtaining this remedy to send their names and addresses, and to return the two bottles free which will arrest the approach of death. Already this remedy, by its timely use, has prevented the approach of death, and has been given up, and death was looked upon as an early visitor.

Knowing his remedy as he does, and being so positive of its beneficent results, Dr. Slocum considers it his religious duty, a duty which he owes to humanity, to donate his infallible remedy where it is needed, to the enemy in its clafled, and by its inherent potency, stay the current of dissolution, bringing joy to homes over which the shadow of the grave has been gradually growing more strongly defined, causing long hearts to rejoice in the cheerfulness of the remedy—offered freely—apart from its inherent strength, is enough to command it, and none so is the perfect confidence of the great chemist making the offer, who holds out life to those already becoming emaciated, and says: "Be cured."

The invitation is certainly worthy of the consideration of the afflicted, who, for years, have been taking nauseous nostrums without effect; who have occasioned themselves from home and friends to live in more salubrious climes, where the atmosphere is more congenial to weakened lungs, and who have fought against death with all the weapons and strength in their hands. There will be no mistake in sending for these free bottles—the mistake will be in passing the invitation by.

Mrs. Virginia Donaghe McClurg of Colorado, the well known lecturer, is visiting the east for the benefit of her son's health, which will probably oblige her to stay here for some months. Mrs. McClurg organized the first party, aside from government expeditions, which explored the ruins of the cliff dwellers in the southwest. For ten years she has made a specialty of these studies and explorations. Mrs. McClurg is not only an archeologist, but a poet of merit and a warm advocate of equal suffrage.

Women as Sculptors.

Clio Hinton Humecker, who has been awarded the $10,000 prize for her statue of Fremont, says of St. Gaudens, whose pupil she is: "He believes in the future of women, especially as sculptors. I have frequently heard him say that the truest artists in his class are women, and that his principal object in taking the class is to afford women an opportunity to prove their genius."

VERY AWKWARD INDEED.

This is precisely the kind of mistake a man makes if he "turns out" on the wrong side of the road when a vehicle comes toward him. No less absurd is the error of the individual who takes drastic medicine to relieve his liver. That organ is on the right side, and the road to its relief is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine also adapted to the relief of dyspepsia, constipation, kidney and rheumatic ailments and malaria.

"None of your sauce," as the boarder said when he refused the Worcestershire.

WIND SWIFT.

Were it not for the intervening mountain ranges, this country, from Northwest to Southeast, would at times in winter be swept by devastating tornadoes. Blizzards seem to arise out of the caves and canons of the plains. Gaining strength and volume over a wide expanse, their force is arrested by the battlements of big hills. Sometimes they rise above the barriers and sweep the Middle states with fury. There you enjoy one day a mean temperature, and the next may be far below freezing. It is like an ice water bath on a warm day, and the shock to muscles, nerves and circulation is the cause of sudden neuralgic and rheumatic attacks, both violent and acute. Those predisposed to such should have the master cure, St. Jacobs Oil, always ready. Its prompt use prevents the chronic stage, and in the chronic stage it is a prompt, sure cure.

"Name, what is classical music?" "Oh, don't you know? It's the kind that you have to like whether you like it or not."
