LOCAL HAPPENINGS.

Ruthyn Turney has been confined to his room several days this week with a severe attack of rheumatism.

Oren L. Clark returned from Portland this week, having been absent several days, undergoing treatment for his impaired eyesight.

Rev. A. W. Sawyer, of Portland, will commence Evangelistic meetings at the Baptist church on Sunday evening, Jan. 24th. Cordial invitation to everyone to attend.

A K. of P. excursion from Albany to Corvallis, is projected for Saturday evening, Jan. 23. The object being to assist the Corvallis lodge in the initiatory ceremonies. A special train will run over, coming back after lodge meeting.—Herald.

Friends and relatives of Mrs. D. A. Osborne are much concerned over her precarious condition. She has been confined to her bed for several weeks with consumption, and yesterday it was understood hopes for her recovery had been abandoned.

At a congregational meeting of the First Presbyterian church of this city on last Sunday, Mr. J. Fred Yates was elected to fill the eldership made vacant by the resignation of Dr. John M. Bloss. A board of deacons was created and C. D. Thompson, D. W. Pritchard, John Hughes and J. T. Porter were elected to serve on such board.

Prof. W. Gifford Nash is to give his first musical recital in Eugene soon. The Guard says a young lady of Eugene remarked: "I have had but two lessons from Mr. Nash as yet. In those two lessons I feel that I have gained more knowledge of music than I have ever learned from all the rest of my instructors put together."

Geo. H. Parsons, leader of Parsons' orchestra, was in town yesterday, making arrangements for an orchestral concert to be given here within the coming month. The Ladies' Coffee Club, it is understood, has taken hold of the matter and will make the entertainment one of the social events of the season. The concert will probably conclude with a hop.

Hon. T. T. Geer, messenger of the Oregon electoral college to the president of the United States senate, left yesterday morning for Washington, D. C., carrying the result of the vote of Oregon's electors in his pocket, and he will personally deliver the package to Vice-President A. E. Stevenson. Mr. Geer will remain in Washington until McKinley and Hobart have been inaugurated into their high offices, returning to his home near this city about the last of March.—Statesman.

A movement is on foot for the establishment of a free ferry at Corvallis. This is a matter whose importance has frequently been urged upon the citizens of Benton county by this paper and it is greatly pleased to note that the project is assuming some tangible shape. A petition to the legislature asking that it confer the proper authority upon the court of Benton county is already generously signed, and the bill which the promoters of the matter have prepared will not likely be opposed in the legislature.

The Spokane Chronicle of January 11 says: Justice W. W. Saunders has commodious offices fitted up in the Zeigler block, where he will hold justice court. He inherits the ermine of Judge Hinkle. Grant S. Wolverson will be his clerk and J. F. Casey his constable. Mr. Saunders has formed a new law partnership with E. O. Connor. The firm of Saunders & Connor has a very fine set of offices next to the justice court room. Mr. Saunders said this morning: "I shall give my entire time to the justice work and Mr. Connor will attend to all the private business which I have had and which the firm may have."

THE DEADLOCK BROKEN.

The House Organized Yesterday With Benson as Speaker—Other Salem News.

(Special to GAZETTE.)

SALEM, OR., JAN. 21.—The ten-days' deadlock of the Oregon legislature is ended. The 29 republicans who have been in their seats ready for business forced an organization this afternoon. This course seemed the only one left for those to pursue who wished to uphold the spirit of the constitution.

Promptly at 2 o'clock the roll was called, showing 33 members present. Brown, of Morrow, introduced a resolution to remove Temporary Speaker Davis and elect in his stead, Dr. Smith, of Marion. Upon Davis' refusal to do so, Brown put the motion, which was carried, Riddle withdrawing. Lake and Stanley escorted Smith to the speaker's desk. Smith and Davis shook hands and both took seats. Thomas, of Multnomah, made a report on credentials, which was adopted. Chief Justice Moore then administered the required oath to members present and Benson, the caucus nominee, was elected permanent speaker.

The other caucus nominees were also elected and Judge Moore administered to them their oaths of office. Two democrats, Misener and Gratke, were in their seats and by their presence, made up the majority necessary for organization. After the transaction of some little business, the house adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning. A crowded gallery and lobby heartily applauded the entire proceedings.

SUNDAY.—The daily program for the house all last week has been calling to order, occasional oratory, roll call, adjournment. There has not been a quorum present since Monday. Public sentiment, regardless of party, is against the action of the absentees. While the 29 members who have been ever present trying to get to work are all republicans, the "hold-up" is not considered a party matter, for those assisting in it are of every shade politically, except straight-out republicans. Every man who has deliberately absented himself against his personal, individual sin against the public to answer for.

The delay in organization cannot be explained or excused on any grounds of law, honesty, public necessity or public good. The clever stayouters do not attempt to give reasons. The duller ones offer the feeble, evasive, tricky excuses built for their use by the smart politicians whose interests they are serving. Simon intends that the house shall not organize, that the legislative assembly shall not convene, and that no senator shall be elected. Mitchell, he resolves, shall be defeated. The First National bank of Portland is behind Simon, the Southern Pacific R. R. company is behind him, and other wealthy corporate interests. Allied to those republican members who are directly under Simon's control, in holding up the hands of the politically-interested men and corporations of wealth, are all the populists of the house and nearly all of the few democrats. This combination, in contrast with recent campaign oratory, would be the richest of humor, were not the enterprise it is engaged upon so dangerous to the public and to free institutions.

The republicans who are so anxious to proceed with business insist upon no terms, nor could they carry out any obnoxious measures, even were such contemplated. They are but twenty-nine. All they ask is that every man elected by the people to represent them in the house, come into the house and represent their people. Mr. Lake said Friday: "I have no political advantage to establish. I am elected as a republican to represent the people, and the people want us to go to work and to get through with the business for which we were elected. Let the members take their seats and we will proceed to organize. If my vote will not help elect the republican nominee for speaker, I will be glad to meet on neutral ground and assist in the speedy organization of the house, that business may be carried on." Mr. Lake's speech, delivered with earnestness and without any show of passion, made a decided impression. Johnathan Bourne still controls the situation, in a measure. He declares that he is a republican and the reasons given by one of his close followers for not attending the session is more apparently valid than any yet offered. He says: "It is apparent that no faction can at present elect a speaker. The republican caucus that nominated Mr. Benson was attended by only 29 members, after most diligent efforts to obtain the necessary 31. An attempt to organize last week would have been futile, and would only have resulted in arousing bitter feelings that would make permanent organization still more difficult. Bourne's supporters, in order to avoid undignified and senseless wrangling before the public, withdrew until prospects were favorable for an amicable agreement. He has no support from, nor combination, with the Simon republicans. They withdrew for reasons of their own."

The deadlock is unmarked by personal bitterness, and even U'Ren's exasperating smile fails to irritate the waiting republicans. The feeling is growing that organization must be effected, even though U'Ren be speaker, in the house, so far as ability goes, are in the B's—Benson, Bourne and Bilyeu. Brown might also be added to the list. Populists are quoting the Oregonian's editorials in support of their position, and Col. Hofer smiles his most expansive smile as he explains, "Oh, Harvey is all right when he gets his eyes open."

The Oregonian's statement that "the house will not organize until organized in the interests of remedial legislation," i. e., organized by Bourne and Barclay, is oppressively funny. That paper indulges in some very unwarranted libels upon the members who stay in their seats. It affects to presume that they are disposed to favor extravagant legislation, when the very contrary is the case.

While some of the stayouters profess extravagant devotion to reform, sensible people will take their very vague explanations with a very large pinch of salt. They know that no legislative reform can be accomplished until the legislature can transact business. Meanwhile the useless commissions, prodigious fees and other tax-eating luxuries maintain their sway.

Probably the chief cause of the "hold-up" is not the speakership nor the senatorship, but a row between Portland politicians over control of the city. Simon wants a new charter that will give him the following the reins of the city government. Anti-Simon republicans want another new charter, and Bourne desires the present charter. This is not a fight that deeply concerns the rest of the state, yet country legislators refuse to do the work of the state, at the dictates of Portland politicians. It is not, after all, so very strange. These interests and the corporations are better paymasters than the state.

A Sunday session of the house was held today, due to the stupidity of the speaker pro tem. He thought it necessary, and as the senate had adjourned, Mr. Simon was not present to set him right. Of course, nothing was accomplished.

Salem is quiet, considering that a session is "on." The populist headquarters, with everything free, are playing havoc with the business houses that dispense beverages, and there is not much money being spent by the legislators or the sightseers. A dramatic company played to fair houses all week.

Citizens of Philomath sent a petition, or rather, demand, to Benton members of the house, asking them in distinct terms to attend to business. Populists, democrats and republicans, to the number of 80, signed it. Among the names were those of Ed and Joe Bryan and J. W. Ingle.

TUESDAY MORNING.—The air is heavy with an impending something, and prospects are favorable for an organization today. Three democrats surrendered yesterday and answered to roll call. If a quorum is present, it means that Benson is to be speaker and that the populists have been conceded some committees. Republicans—real populists—place the people's good above party advantage.

Harry B. Miller, president of the Oregon Agricultural College, is here again this week. Salem may be the proper place now for college presidents, but, strangely enough, President Chapman and President Campbell find plenty to do at home. Mr. Miller stated that he was not down here on account of politics, and that he has had nothing to do with Joe Simon for six years. He claimed to have dropped politics on assuming the presidency of the college and was only down here in the interest of college legislation. Senator Carter recently received a petition signed by several Benton county republicans, asking that he do not vote for Senator

ATTEMPTS COERCION.

Miss Snell Makes a Futile Effort to Organize a Boycott Against This Paper.

In Miss Margaret Snell, professor of household economy at the O. A. C., President Miller has a devoted friend and ally. In fact, her pleadings in his behalf are most pathetic, and her praises of his scholarly attainments and management of college affairs border on the extravagant. It is hinted even, that with her gracious manners and extravagant praises she has virtually hypnotized the president, and there are potent reasons for believing that the institution, to an extent at least, is under petticoat management. It is also claimed that petticoat management of state institutions is the latest political fad—having been introduced into Kansas by the notorious Mrs. Mary Ellen Lease—and that President Miller, desirous of being up-to-date politically, had turned over to Miss Snell a portion of his arduous duties. Be that as it may, she seems active and energetic in the discharge of her labors, and will doubtless be of great advantage to the institution as her experience matures.

One of the first duties assigned to her was the muzzling of this paper. She hadn't had much experience in the muzzling business, but she undertook the task with avidity, and with a zeal that was very refreshing. She knew that editors were poor and quickly conceived the idea of starving the GAZETTE into silence. Saturday morning she sallied forth and spent the day organizing a boycott. She represented herself as an ambassador from the faculty, with full power to conclude negotiations. She visited the business men and demanded that they withdraw their advertising patronage from the GAZETTE and stop their subscription to the paper, under the penalty of losing the trade of the students and faculty.

The conversation reported to have taken place in one business house is about as follows: "Do you take the Corvallis GAZETTE?" "I do." "Well, I want you to stop it." "Why so, Miss Snell, I have no fault to find with the paper?" "Because it criticizes President Miller, and he is such a dear fellow and is making such a grand success of the college. We college people are going to get as many as possible to stop their paper, and that will make it cease its unfavorable comments," she said, with an emphatic nod of her head.

"Well, Miss Snell," the business man replied, "have you stopped your paper?" "No, sir," she said, somewhat disconcerted. "I never subscribed for the paper. I have to live within my salary. Household economy teaches us that."

The business man thought it rather queer that she was so familiar with the GAZETTE's columns, but didn't think it worth while to speak of the matter. He declined her request, however, in a manner that evidenced his utter contempt for her course in the premises.

"I am too much of an American," he said, "to comply with your demand. The constitution of the United States provides specifically for civil and religious liberty and the freedom of the press. The college is a public institution and as such is a proper subject for newspaper comment. Many of President Miller's acts have not met with public approval and the comments of the GAZETTE have doubtless reflected the sentiment of the community. My observation has been that nothing unfavorable appeared in the paper except on two occasions: one item followed the hanging of the president in effigy and the other related to a matter brought out by the president's report at the recent board meeting."

This statement did not in the least discourage the lady nor swerve her from her purpose. She had undertaken the job of organizing a boycott and she proposed to earn her salary. Later in the day she called upon F. L. Miller and threatened him with serious pecuniary loss unless he agreed to withdraw his patronage from the GAZETTE immediately. "Why," she said, "unless you do this, none of we college people will trade with you."

Mr. Miller did not seem at all perturbed by her meddlesome talk and plainly informed her that when he wanted advice from President Miller or other members of the faculty, he would make his wishes known. He had so far found himself capable of managing his affairs and that members of the faculty who desired to trade elsewhere because he refused to trade coerced, were probably not numbered among his customers. He had never allowed outsiders to dictate in the management of his business and didn't propose to allow it now. He was opposed to the principles of boycotting as being un-American and he was surprised that President Miller should encourage such contemptible procedure.

Miss Snell visited other business houses during the day and wherever she called, so far as can be learned, met with a frosty reception. The general feeling seemed to prevail that her course, instead of aiding the cause of President Miller, was doing much toward aggravating the trouble. Miss Snell has surprised and grieved her friends by her ungentle action, and such distasteful publicity as her course must necessarily arouse is highly regrettable. The most unfortunate incident connected with the affair is the fact that Miss Snell felt called upon to expense the memory of President Arnold. Not only were her reflections impolitic, but are unjust to the scholar and gentleman who so long and so wisely presided over the college, and who is beyond the need of praise or criticism.

DEATH OF MAYOR KELSAY.

The flag at half mast on the city hall Wednesday morning first told the citizens of the death of an Oregon pioneer and one of the oldest and best known residents of Corvallis—Col. John Kelsay. But a few days ago "the Colonel" was taken with a severe cold that rapidly developed into acute bronchitis, and after nine o'clock Tuesday evening he fell into a sleep from which there was no awakening. The hero of the battlefield had surrendered to the conqueror of all! The issues were made up and his last case called for trial at the bar of God. During his seventy-seven years of life, honor and preference had come to him. Before leaving Missouri he had served in the legislature of that state; as a lawyer, he had been invested with the greatest honor that can come to a member of the profession—a position on the bench. As a citizen he was honored in 1857 by being chosen as a delegate to the constitutional convention that met in Salem and his name appears as a subscriber to the constitution of Oregon. And at his death he was serving a term as mayor of the city in which he had made his home since coming to Oregon.

His birth occurred in Wayne county, Kentucky, Oct. 23, 1819. Two years later his parents moved to Morgan county, Missouri. Education in those days was difficult to obtain, but he availed himself of all opportunities for study and at the age of 26 he was admitted to practice law, which profession he followed through life. In 1846 he was married to Miss Martha C. Moore and seven years later, crossed the plains to Oregon, locating in Corvallis, where he has since resided. Fired with patriotism, he organized a company of militia, of which he was commissioned captain, and went into the field to assist in suppressing the uprising of the Rogue River Indians. At the age of 18, in Missouri, he had been a captain of militia, and at the age of 20 was a major. His first wife died in 1854 and ten years later he married Miss Countess, who with a son and a daughter, survive him. The funeral services were held in the circuit court room yesterday afternoon and were conducted by Rev. E. J. Thompson, assisted by Dr. Plummer. The members of the city council and Benton county bar attended in a body. The remains were interred in Crystal Lake cemetery.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

J. Fred Yates returned Wednesday from a brief visit to Salem. Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred Yates entertained a few intimate friends at their home Saturday evening.

Bradly Burnett is gaining national fame. Saturday's Examiner contains a picture of the Corvallis record breaker and with it a statement that he is to be a member of the Stanford athletic team, which is to tour the east during the coming season.

Harry Samuels, solo cornetist with Prof. Parsons' orchestra, arrived home Monday for a few days' visit with relatives. He had been seriously ill for a few weeks previous to his return home, but it is understood that he is entirely recovered.

Ben Woldt disposed of his interest in "The Leo" this week to Chris Gernanson and the firm name of the proprietors of this popular resort will hereafter be Kirk & Gernanson. Ben is yet undecided as to what business he will engage in.

The latest reports regarding the condition of J. R. Bryson, who is undergoing treatment at Good Samaritan hospital, Portland, are to the effect that the patient is improving as rapidly as could be expected and that he will be home soon, entirely recovered and ready for business.

A courtship of thirteen years duration was pleasantly terminated Sunday last by the marriage, at the bride's home, of Henry Daus, a well known Benton county farmer, to Miss Orena C. Keyes. A host of friends join in wishing them a happy and prosperous journey through life.

Frank Conover, who has been connected with the GAZETTE most of the time during the past ten years, left Sunday for Salem. His purpose in leaving Corvallis is to take charge of a job printing office in the capital city and he thinks his prospects for success are very flattering. Frank is an exceptionally capable printer and we wish him success in his new field.
