A HINT FROM THE KLONDIKE

Joseph Ladue, the famous trapper and miner and the present owner of Dawson City, and for many years the agent of the Alaska Commercial Company, gives a hint to persons going to Alaska, and pays great compliment to a well-known article. He writes:

"I have always used the Royal Baking Powder in Alaska and Northwest Territory, as no other gave equal satisfaction in that harsh climate. I also found my customers always insisted on having that brand."

A Fugitive King's Fete.

"About four miles from Philadelphia there was a magnificent mansion built after the Italian manner in the previous century by Governor John Penn, and known as Lansdowne house in honor of the Marquis of Lansdowne. Here Joseph Bonaparte," records William Perrine, writing in the April Ladies' Home Journal of 'When the King of Spain Lived on the Banks of the Schuylkill,' "established himself in rural ease until he had built his 'palace' at Bordentown, N. J. Toward the end of the summer of 1817 Joseph had a little dinner party at Lansdowne. Among the guests was Dr. Benjamin Rush's daugther, Julia, who was pleased with what she thought his fluent conversation, his urbane manner and his good looks, and who, perhaps, was somewhat inclined to sympathize with his complaint that Napoleon had not been at all disposed to let him have much of his own way either as soldier or king.

Presently Peggy, in one of her frantic rushes from the pursuing Jimmy, ran plump into Buchanan's outstretched arms. Poor little thing!-she almost fainted with fright when she saw who her captor was (and for the matter of that Jimmy was quite as horrified); but the very first words Buchanan spoke reassured her. When I entered he was telling her about his own little girlsparticularly about the one that was dead.

Peggy became quite a feature of the Disseminator's city department. She had a funny little piece of needle work which she called her "emb'oydy"meaning embroidery, I suppose; and at this she stitched, or made believe to stitch, assiduously. But she had a dark corner, heard stealthy steps, and saw two men enter the room. One stitch, assiduously. But she had a quick eye and wit, had Peggy; and, lit-of them she recognized as a discharg-ed printer of the Disseminator-Healy had dull tle by little, she managed to pick up all the technicalities of the office-the manner of managing that wondrous

One day I found her, perched on a table, gravely calling up "Thentral" on the phone, and asking with visible importance for "Thix - hund'ed-an'-thirtytheyen." On another occasion I met her toddling down from the composing room with a bundle of proofs in her chubby arms, while from the printers' landing that usually dignified person, the foreman, watched over her daring voyage.

About the middle of January two notable events occurred. One was the breaking of Jimmy McGovern's leg in a "coasting" accident, and the consequent loss of that invaluable youngster for office purposes. The second-well, you

Great was his astonishment (he admits that he at first accused himself of dreaming) when there came across the wires a voice he knew-a lisping childtsh voice-calling faintly:

"Misto' Boocan'! Oh-h, Misto' Boocan! Zis is Peggy, Jimmy's sister." "Good gracious!" cried Buchanan. "What do you want, child?"

South African Mine Laborers Lead Monotonous Life.

Life on a South African mining property can hardly be monotonous. The report of a traveler fresh from the cape gives a curious insight into one phase of labor on the Rand. It used to be the custom of the Kaffir, on receiving his salary-usually $5 per week-to sally forth and invest all his earnings in bottles of brandy. He would then return to his hut, squat down and drink it like beer until he succumbed. This went on regularly among the mining staffs of all the large companies until, in order to prevent a weekly cessation of labor, the companies adopted the method of inclosing all their native employes inside a compound, and s'utting them in like prisoners until their time of service has elapsed. Visitors to the compounds often take l:: a nound or so of the native coarse tobacco, for a handful of which the Kaffirs, under stress of their deprivation of tobacco as well as liquor, will often gladly exchange fine old native bracelets and knobkerries. The native method of smoking is peculiar. After the pipe is filled several long pulls are taken and the smoke swallowed. The bowl is then taken off, the stem is inserted in a bowl of water, and the water is sucked through it and swallowed also. Then comes the tug of war. The man who can hold out longest without coughing is considered a hero. After a short time the smoker will convulsively cough for fifteen or twenty minutes, and one can quite understand why the Kaffir is not allowed out to buy tobacco. In the case of the traveler, who gives these details, the mine manager asked him to cease bar-
