MR. LANE'S SPEECH.

[Concluded from last week]

But of this enough. "I speak with charity for all and with malice toward none." I even love those who despitefully treat me. Thus far I have only meant to vindicate the character of my people from the assaults made upon them, or rather upon their Representative.

Now, a word as to the merits of the bill itself. I am convinced, Mr.

Chairman, after candid and mature deliberation, that in point of fitness for the performance of the duties required of them by this bill the Army officers are at least the equal of the civil appointees under the present system. Indeed, I almost blush to pay so qualified a compliment to the honesty and integrity of the Army.

Of the evils of the present system of Indian management, of the wrongs daily perpetrated upon both the Government and the helpless people whom it tries to benefit, of the disgrace heaped upon the nation by it, I need not speak on this occasion. Its history has been written in every journal in the land, sounded from every stump, and is being hourly recorded before an honorable committee of this House. It is a system which thus far has reflected no credit upon our Government. The people are not merely dissatisfied but thoroughly disgusted with its operations, nor will they be content with a measure looking to its elevation or purification only. They have given it a fair test and no good has come of it.

They demand that it be wholly wiped out of our internal policy. In deference to this demand this bill has been framed and its passage is hopefully looked for by all who are on the frontier and speak from actual experience.

Mr. Chairman, there is no design in this bill to use force beyond what now exists. It is not contemplated by it or any friend of it that there shall be stationed among the Indians any more soldiers than there are now with them. In my humble judgment, among the civilized tribes no agent is necessary, and if one be required I can see no reason why an honest officer of the Army cannot conserve the interests of the Indians as well as a politician of questionable antecedents and doubtful or even fair reputation.

Among the wild tribes the presence of the Army is conceded by all to be absolutely necessary.

Upon this point I beg to refer to my letter addressed to the gentleman in charge of this bill, [Mr. Sparks,] and embodied in the report accompanying

it. I then said:
