The large increase of my business has compelled me to rent the store No. 3727, and use it entirely for Birds, Mammals, Shells, Plants, Books, Fossils, Mound Builders' Relics and all objects of Natural History except Minerals. I have secured the services of one of the best taxidermists in the country, a gentleman who who was employed by the Smithsonian Institution in South America for three years. I have a very large stock of Western and Southern birds on hand. Also, Heads and Antlers for Museums, Dining-Rooms, Halls and Libraries.

I have now over 38 tons, and nearly $35,000 worth of Minerals on hand. I have sold over $17,000 worth since the 17th day of January, when the first box was put into my establishment. November 13th, my cash sales were over $1,500 and cash receipts over $1,200.

loved and wooed the same maiden, Anna, "upon the Atlantic shore," and she had chosen David and they were married. Peltiah had become rich at the time of the beginning of the story,

"And lands and banking stocks had he And other funds of great degree." while David was a poor sailor. Peltiah laid a plot to get rid of him and offered him the post of mate, which he accepted. The ship with which he sailed did not reappear and was

"Then away to her lonely bed
Poor Anna would shiver and shrink,
And dream that her demon of Dread
Was suspending her over a brink
Of a strange, fuscinating temptation.
Then she'd rise with a terrible shriek,
And toss her arms wildly about,
Like a mad woman in a strange freak,
And aroused her two boys with a shout
That would end but with utter prostration

This was bad. Peltiah pretended to bewail his lost ship. Anna and the children got hungry. But-"To bow in womanly subjection To laws ordained for her protection Was Anna's constant aim."

Peltiah called and roughly offered to marry her. She repulsed him.

"Once more Peltiah Curtis rose, And blew his red, resounding nose; Then hied he fast across the moor." To his grand home by ocean shore." They went to church. Peltiah rose and exhorted all to be humble and not rebel against the flat of Omnipotence : "God gave and He doth take away;

His ways inscrutable,
To murmer at, lest direst harm
Befall me, I'd not dare."

Peltiah was selfish. He strove to compel Anna to marry him by withsistance which he at first tendered; Concerning this the author philosophizes :

"You deem an individual act
Expressing an oppressive fact
Most reprehensible; but stay
Are aggregates less bad than they?" Surely enough! Well, anyhow; Peltiah kept up his ostentatious show of piety, and

"Especially he loved to hate
The minister whom honest fate
Inspired to say that there was true
And perfect law in dare to do
To other people as you view
It right that they should do you."
Finally Peltiah, who had become deacon, carried Anna and the boys to his own house, and there popped the question.

"'Ahem?' the Dencon coughed; 'ahem?'
As struggling with asthmatic phlegm
He strove the wished-for way to pave
To subject solemn as the grave." He finally succeeded in expressing himself on that subject, and she, ex-State of Oregon-Flax-For very fine hausted by poverty and famine at the quality, considerable strength, good color door, accepted. Then he kissed her extravagantly, and she didn't like

"As quick as thought she cried, 'Beware !
I'll brain you with this heavy chair!" At last conciliation prevailed, He promised to behave himself and blew his nose a great deal. Then she ran home with the boys. "'Why didn't you wait for the deacon and sleigh?"

Shortly afterwards the two were married. In Canto II it is revealed that David's ship has long been wrecked and David himself sold into Algerine slavery. He weeps over his wife and children, and exclaims in sad accents, "Mashallah! Mashallah!" appearing, like Cleopatra, in "Dombey and Son," to have forgotten the name of God. His native language has slipped out of his mind and he has learned one word of another. Peltiah subsequently goes abroad and ascertains that his unhappy rival has is a bigamist. She has more children.

"Her babies, puny and neglected.
Were cross and ailing and dejected,
And even in their infancy
Evolved their father's tyranny."

She also suffers, more or less, for we are informed that notwithstands ing the wolf is driven from the door her former beauty is modified:

"Her voice grew cracked and coarse and loud, Her once soft hands grew hard like thorns; Her feet disfigured were with corns, Her clothes were little more than rags, Her teeth were little else than snags." The reader is not surprised to learn that after a few more years of hard Narrative poems seem to be the work, in which the cracked voice and diplomas awarded to Oregon and Oregon fashion of the day.
