The Agricultural Outlook.

The San Francisco Post sums ur the outlook for agriculturists as follows: "The fact appears to be admitted that in a considerable section fail or be a short crop. In other dis. people and then leave them unprotected tricts which have been favored with seasonable rain, the yield promises to for Hayes to do this to the men who, at the hazard of their lives, gave him votes withbe good. On the whole, however, we doubt whether the wheat crop will nearly come up to that of last year. Barley, undoubtedly, will be short, but corn will make a good showing. While this is likely to be the outcome, there is a certainty of a large demand at enhanced prices on European account. The supply of breadstuffs in paved with just such good intentions England is admittedly short, and the war between Russia and Turkey, which now appears inevitable, may involve England and shut off from Baltic ports would, of course, be open to England, but that source of supply would only partially meet require-ments.
