Rev. H. K. Hines, the candidate for Cogress, is a preacher of moderate ability in the Methodist Church, who is chiefly distinguished for his sonorous voice, cumbrous vocabulary, clumsy diction and an unusual "gift of continuance." He has always had a sort of itching for office and has dabbled in politics just enough to interfere with his complete efficiency in the pulpit without earning any particular reputation in a secular way. He has been at all times a thorough-going, bigoted, thick and thin Republican of the most acrid type. It is said that when the so called Union party was formed in Oregon, some sixteen years ago, he made a political speech in Salem in which he gave a conspicuous illustration of his principles by declaring that "if he saw his own father upholding the Confederate flag he would be the first to point a gun at his bosom and shoot him down." Such a sentiment from the lips of a preacher of the gospel of peace was so shocking that there were none in his audience bold enough to applaud it. It is believed by a good many in Mr. Hines' own party that notwithstanding his preent nomination he has intrigued to get it in a very unseemly way. 'If he was sincere in his statement that he was not a candidate and did not want the nemination it was certainly a singular proceeding that although he was not a delegate, he should have left his church in Union county and traveled all the way to Salem to be present at the convention with two proxies in his pocket! Preachers who are anxious to continue in the work to which they have been called and to avoid being nominated for office generally stay away from political conventions, or at least do not go unless they are sent. If Mr. Hines was not a candidate he took a singular way of showing it. To our mind this whole thing of begging his friends not to use his name, stuffing his pockets with proxies, coquettishly declining in favor of his friend Snodgrass and then permitting himself to be persuaded to accept, looks a good deal like a sort of pious but very shal low demogoguery, while his sanctimonious declaration that he recognized " the voice of God" in his nomina-

An extraordinary religious move ment is taking place in Sweden, where a petition signed by nearly 25,000 persons has been presented to the King, praying that "the use of the Holy Communion may be free, like the use of God's Word," or in other words, that the celebration of the communion may take place also out of churches, and that the celebrants may be other than persons in holy orders. The Ecclestiastical Court at the Ca:hedral Chapter of Upsala, to whom the petition has been referred, has reported against such an innovation, which, in their opinion, "would eventually destroy the church." the wholesale trade, says the Baltimore Sun, that the bankrupt act, notwithstanding various modifications beretofore, has had a mischievious tendency in so far as it has opened an easy way to a certain class of debtors to rid themselves of their obligations by failing in business. It is | years. | Sec. 2. That we heartily approve the action charged "that the case with which parties have gone through bankruptcy, and procure fresh credits, facilitates dishonest methods on the part of conscienceless debtors of which merchants complain." It is undoubtedly true that since the bankruptcy act went into operation merchants have not been satisfied with the results attained, or with the delays and costs incurred in settling up bankrupts' estates. To avoid these, they have in a large majority of cases, preferred chiefelly for his appraisment of the to come to a composition with a debtor, and sign his release, rather than wait the formal proceeding in bankruptey and a doubtful distribution of the realized assets. But a great deal of the blame which is cast on the bankrupt act ought really be attached to the merchants themselves.

No bankrupt law, however hedged about with checks and guards, can about with checks and guards. can about with checks and guards, can ever wholly protect creditors from the sharp practice that it is alleged "characterizes many of the failures that have been recently announced." Where fraudulent converson of goods can be proved, there is law enough in all States, even outside of the bankrupt act, which itself prescribes heavy penalties, to punish such rascalities. Amendments to the present bankrupt law may provide for a simple, more inexpensive and quicker mode of settling bankrupt estates, and may make the penal clauses heavier, but the cases are comparatively rare in which dishonest banktruth is, that no inconsiderable part of the commercial failures that have taken place are due to the looseness with which credits were formerly given. The competition for business during the past four years, when trade has been depressed and the markets have been glutted with all sorts of commodicies has led many merchants to unload upon their customers greater of the United States, and to vindicate its jurisdiction against eacroachments from any source whatever. That in the administration of State affairs the preservation of private right and promotion of justice should be the principal aim; that taxation should be equal and uniform, and extravagant expenditures of the public revenues be avoided. Economy should be the watchword, and rigorous laws be enacted for the management and preservation of the various funds belonging to the State.

Sign. 10. That we are in favor of improvement which credits were formerly given, quantities of goods than the latter could sately buy; the merchants themselves knowing that they were making their sales on a falling market, and consequently shifting the shrinkage in value from their own shoulders to those who dealt with them. NATURAL SELECTION.

Investigations of natural science have demonstrated beyond controversy, that throughout the animal kingdom the "survival of the fittest" is the only law vouchsafes thift and perpetuity. Does not the same principle govern the commercial prosperity of man? An inferior cannot prove a superior article. By reason of cial prosperity of man? An inferior cannot supersede a superior article. By reason of superior merit, Dr. Pierce's Standard Medicines have outrivaled all others. Their sale in the United States alone exceeds one million dollars per annum, while the amount exported foots up to several hundred thousand more. No business could grow to such gigantic proportions and rest upon any other basis than that of merit.
