

THE EUGENE CITY GUARD.
EUGENE CITY, OREGON.
SATURDAY, MAR. 15, 1879.

Country Press.

The Standard of March 8th, discourses as follows on the trials, and tribulations of the average editor of a country newspaper. Tony has had the experience, and is a competent witness.

"We have lately seen a clipping going the rounds of the interior press setting forth the many difficulties of publishing a country weekly paper. While there was a great deal of truth in the article referred to, we think that it hardly told the 'whole truth.' There was no mention of the many disagreeable accidents that happen among the compositors, the lack of type, and the non-arrival of the source of most editorial ideas—exchange. In small towns everybody knows everybody, and ten chances to one everybody is related to everybody, directly or indirectly. A first-class shooting scrape occurs, the editor sharpens his Faber for a full account of it, 'influential friends' of the belligerents come to the sanctum and announce that the item must be suppressed. What is the poor editor to do? To persist in heralding to the world that Jack Buckshot severely wounded Bill Bowie would result in the 'influential' men taking their 'ads' out of the paper, and in their going about from store to saloon, getting their acquaintances to stop their subscriptions. He must meekly comply, and blunt his sharpened pencil with a hackneyed editorial on 'The Resources of Oregon.' All subjects of public importance must be couched with; for as all such questions have at least two sides, to be found championing any one of them would be at the risk of making enemies of all the readers of contrary opinions. If farmer Barleycorn gets a local puff on his big turnips, farmer Pommetter grows green with jealousy and forthwith stops his paper. The editor of a country paper scarcely dares mention a dog fight, through fear of hurting the sensitive feelings of one or both of the canine proprietors. He must eschew everything that is susceptible of a difference of opinion and throw all his talent into editorials upbraiding Hayes for vetoing the Chinese restriction bill, or articles on his county's fertility and universal pre-eminence.

Struggling against such obstacles to journalism—the journalism that publishes all news within reach, treating friend and foe alike, and having opinions, dares maintain them—it is indeed a wonder that our interior exchanges are as truly interesting as they are. Stripped of their best items, circumscribed in their editorial limits, to make their papers not only readable, but relishable is a miracle for which the country editor is deserving public recognition. We have experienced the arduous duties of publishing a non-committal weekly paper, (in the local department) and would rather a hundred times edit a daily of the most virulent type, taking all the risks of lawsuits and black eyes. The average readers does not appreciate the great difficulties under which such an editor labors, and if we have said a word that will make those hypercritical geniuses who abound in every village, a little more charitable in their censures we shall feel that we have at least been of some little good to our unappreciated brothers of the country press."

A Noteworthy Matter.

The two Senators who now represent Connecticut in Congress are Democrats. They both stood firm in advocacy of the Bill to restrict Chinese immigration. Senator Eaton has been steadfast on the right side for the last twelve years. The present Legislature of that State is Radical. The Radical House has adopted a resolution to the effect that the anti-Chinese Bill before Congress is "a flagrant violation of a sacred and honorable Treaty," and that its provisions would "disgrace our national statutes." No Democratic house has ever done any thing of that kind.

The fossil, that directs the Oregonian, is almost bursting with envy because some attention has been paid to Hon. John Whiteaker. Encouraged in his cynicism, and lacking every generous impulse, this dr. valer, and back biter is certainly a object for the pity of all honest men.

Contemptible.

The figure head of the Oregonian, that improves every opportunity to belittle everything, and everybody, that are not in perfect accordance with his narrow and contracted vision, goes out of his way to slur our representative in congress, Hon. John Whiteaker. The editor of the Oregonian, having secured honors, and riches only by his wallowing in the slimes of political prostitution, evidently thinks that an honest man is of no importance in the councils of the nation. Congressman Whiteaker can point with pride to his services in this State, covering a period of over twenty years, and can say that during that time his honesty has met with no question. Can the editor of the Oregonian say as much? We think not, for if rumor be true, his political dealings have been dark, and of a character which all honorable men gladly eschew. The only sympathy that a large portion of the community has for Senator Mitchell, has been formed by the unceasing, and bitter attacks of the Oregonian upon his honor, and ability as a representative. By persisting in attacks of this nature, that organ is surely losing the respect of all right minded citizens of this State.

Questions Yet to be Answered.

(S. E. Examiner.)

The officers of the Western Union Telegraph Company have confessed that a trunk full of the dispatches which passed between the leading Radicals North, and those who went South, to manage the frauds in South Carolina, Florida and Louisiana, was burned by order of Orton. Why did he order them to be destroyed if, as the Radicals engaged in sending them now assert, they contained nothing wrong, or which they would fear to have exposed? And why did he preserve all the dispatches on the Democratic side? Had he been honest, he would have either burned all, or preserved all. Inasmuch as fraud was perpetrated, as honest Radicals themselves admit there was, and the Democratic dispatches show—that other events have demonstrated—that the Democrats did not commit it, the presumption, as well as the absolute proof, is, that the Radicals did.

Our Schools.

EUGENE CITY March 2d, 1879.

Editors GUARD—In the Oregonian of March 10, there appears a communication purporting to come from Eugene, and attacking the management of the public school of this city. The writer thereof shows himself to be one of those barbares, that instigate every community fighting, and opposing everything that may tend to elevate and improve the condition of society. He says that the city has built an "extravagant" school house, and thereby proves himself unreliable, and lacking in veracity. It is well known, that the structure that has been erected for school purposes is no more than adequate to the number of scholars in the district. The teachers employed receive but a fair salary, and are each crowded with pupils in their respective rooms. The fact is, that the writer of the communication is one of that class, who would stop all public enterprise, and thrive through fear of having to pay a paltry tax.

The McGibeny's in Michigan.

From the Citizen, a journal published in Jackson, Michigan, we learn that the McGibeny family were there rendering their popular "song service" on the 8th ult., carrying all hearts by storm. The Kalamazoo Telegraph says of their recent sacred concert in that city: "Over twelve hundred people were in Union Hall last evening to hear the song service of the McGibeny family. Everything passed off in the most satisfactory manner; the selections, both vocal and instrumental, were in good taste and appropriate. The sweet songs of the little ones, and the beautiful harmony of their singing and playing, delighted every one. It was the most refined and delightful sacred service ever listened to by many present last evening, and it adds not a little to the interest that all feel after having once heard them, to know that they are a refined and Christian family, and worthy of the respect and esteem of all."

The Chinaman.

One of our citizens owed the Chinaman two dollars and a half for laundry services, and he had been deviling the son of Shem by pretending to have no money. Yesterday morning the Chinaman entered in a towering passion. "Melican man," he yelled, "you no payme, ne shootee, stabbe, killee, dan quick, alle samee." And then seizing him by the coat-collar, he fairly howled, "comee longee to de postoffice." This was the only government institution that he knew about, and he was going to have him taken there. The gentleman finally paid the Chinaman, and he departed greatly mollified.
