Marrying the Wrong Woman. John Parry, incomparably the most humorous comie singer England ever had, used to sing a song about a shortsighted man who, when the marriage ceremony was concluded, found to his herror that he had married his intended wife's waiting maid. A few weeks ago a similar sort of blunder really nearly happened. A couple residing at Devon, England, went to the parish church to be married. The bride groom, instead of taking his intended bride at the church door and accompanying her to the altar, walked thither with the took the floor and merely said that have thought that her intended hushe had never been a noted highway band had changed his mind at the last moment, and she retired into a pew in a very dejected state of mind.
