Touch Not the Wine.
(New York Sun.)
Some deaths among the Tenth Avenue gang may be confidently expected within the current week. The following advertisement, published in a morning newspaper, may aid the Coroner who holds the inquests in determining the cause of death:
$10 REWARD—FOR RETURN OF wine taken from 484 8th av. Liquor dealers, take warning, as four bottles are poison.
"The proprietor of the bar room at 484 Eighth avenue is A. F. Pekar, who is fat, plegmatic, and upwards of forty."
"Yah," he said, last evening, "dot ish mein advertisement, and I pay for it, too," and he gazed proudly upon the clipping that he held between his thumb and forefinger.
"Was there really poison in some of the bottles of wine that were stolen from you?" he was asked.
"Yah, yah," continued Mr. Pekar, with undisturbed phlegm. "I fix dot meinself. Der fellers dot shtok dot wein will get a big dose. We vill hear of some dead peobles around here. I vould make a luedle bet. I vill tell you how it vas. Der fellers have cleaned out mein place five times. One dime dey shtole all der liquors and der cigars dot vas in der vay and der next dime der billiard balls and der bagatelle balls and mein new boots. Dot shoemaker in der basement dot keep no more shoes in his place. Der tellers wait, and ven he gets a big shtok they vork off mit it. Der shoemaker keeps der shoes in another place and makes dem in the basement. So dem fellers come to mein place again. Und den I get very mad, and I fixes some bottles mid der poison—Oxford Salts dot poison is, I guess—and I put ter bottles mid der other bottles. I put some private marks on der bottles mid der poison, and mein bar keeper und meinself dot fix dot to den customers. Vell, der fellers come again Thursday night. Mid a key der fellers unlocked den door of mein basement, and shtole der wine. Den fellows shtole four bottles mid der poison, and ven der bottle is drunk, yet a dose some fellers vill get. I hal advertise dot wine so dat der liquor dealers dot be careful dot dey don't buy poison."
"Then Mr. Pekar returned his chat with his bar keeper and a customer as though no vision of the possible death throes of the thieves who stole his wine, or others who may innocently buy it, disturbed him.
His bar keeper, however showed some uneasiness as to what might follow, should death result from drinking from the poisoned bottles, and he asked whether any punishment could be imposed upon Mr. Pekar for putting the poison in them."

Probably Another Ohio Man.
(Detroit Free Press.)
The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, nor is it the man with the largest mouth that gets the most favors in this world. Yesterday forenoon a very quiet stranger entered a real-estate office on Griswood street and slyly asked if he could use a blottin'-pad a moment. One was handed him and he sat down to a table, looked around and said:
"Ah! thanks, but have you pen and ink?"
They were furnished him. He tried the pen on the pad, shook the ink around and modestly continued:
"If you could spare me a sheet of paper?"
A sheet was handed him. He wrote a brief letter, folded it up and whispered:
"I shall have to beg an envelope of you?"
An envelope was passed over, and, when he had directed it, he looked all over the table, under the table, up at the ceiling and inquired:
"You could lend me a stamp, could you?"
A three center was handed out, and when it was flicked on, the stranger rose and started out, saying:
"As you have no office boy, I suppose I shall have to take this letter to the office myself."

The gun of Richard Goga, a barber who was accidentally discharged last week: The ball passed through his left hand and entered his left side about the second rib, then passed up towards the top of the chest and lodged just beneath the skin. Mr. Nye cut the ball out.

West Chehalis county farmers, says the McMinnville Reporter, are very much at a loss to account for the appearance of blight in the early wheat. Fields of wheat have the appearance of ripening, but upon examination it is found to be entirely dead and the grains in the head shriveled and in some instances wholly without any kernel whatever.

That Barrel.
Just as the last rays of the setting sun were gilding the church spires and whitewashing the back kitchens of Detroit the other afternoon, a man and a barrel were discovered at a stairway on Monros avenue. He was a small man and it was a big barrel, and pedestrians who saw him looking up the stairs and back to the barrel inferred that it was his intention to elevate it to the third story. But how?
"I'd rig a tackle and pulley in that third story window," said the first man who halted. "That's your easiest way, and there's no danger of a cold."
He leaned against the lamp post to calculate on the length of rope and the lifting power required, and along came a second man, who took in the situation at a glance, and said:
"Go and get some scantlings fourteen feet long, and lay 'em on the stairs. Then two men can roll that barrel up there as slick as grease."
The little man looked around in a helpless sort of a way, and a third man came blustering up, and called out:
"Want to get that barrel up stairs, eh? Well, now, fasten your pulley at the head of the stairs, and ten men down here can snake the barrel up in no time. Where's your tackle?"
By this time the crowd had increased to twenty, and was pretty evenly divided between a dead tilt through one of the front windows and a pulley at the top of the stairs; but the man who suggested the skids had a very loud voice, and was determined to carry his point. Taking off his coat, he said:
"I know what I'm talking about, and I say that I can skid that barrel up there alone. You just wait a minute."

He crossed the street to an unfinished building and returned with a couple of 2x4 scantlings and laid them down on the stairs, and the crowd now numbered fifty.
"You want this barrel on the third floor, do you?" he asked of the little man.
"Yes—but—but—"
"But what?"
"Why, I was going to wait for my wife to get the clothes horse out of the upper hall. She's all ready now, and I'll take it up."
And the little man shouldered the barrel and trotted briskly up the stairs between the skids. It was empty!—Detroit Free Press.

A Famous Gambler's Career.
The weight of evidence, or rather a assertion, is that the famous gambler, Garcia, is indeed dead. He was born in Spain and first came into fame as a great player at Homburg, where he had arrived with a small capital of $4,000 francs. A steady run of fortune in his favor increased his capital to a million, and made him the lion of the place. Mons. Blanc (who died two years ago) enjoyed a tilt of his titanic sort, and was keenly alive to the advantages of a gigantic advertisement, hence he gave the gambler the privilege of playing a sum five times greater than the limit, or maximum, so that $12,000 depended on each turn of the ball.
After a month's struggle, Garcia left Homburg in his own carriage, drawn by four horses, with the whole town in a procession cheering him as he drove away with a half million in his pocket. He went back to Spain, built a church, gave alms liberally, and took an oath never to gamble again. This oath he kept for two years, living in princely fashion in Spain, but spending the gaming seasons on the Rhine, watching the players with serene pleasure. One day at Baden the Duke of Morney met him and asked him to play a few stakes that he might see something of the wonderful system by which the great gambler had broken the bank. Garcia declined and explained that he had renounced play forever, to which the Duke replied with something of a sneer that probably he had been prudent in doing so.
Garcia settled at the remark put down a note and lost it, and another, and lost that. The Duke laughed so tauntingly at this that Garcia went to his hotel, stuffed his pockets with notes and gold and returned to the play room. When it closed at night he had lost nearly $100,000; in a few days the whole $500,000 had vanished. The Calzado affair followed, when Garcia was imprisoned for card sharpening; this ruined him finally. Ere the play stopped at Saxon-Baines he hung round the place, tendering instructions to inexperienced players; afterwards he haunted Menasco, where, however, he was refused access to the gaming tables when he had money. So he died in poverty.

Very kind gentleman—"Do you know, my dear, that we have to day the shortest day in the year?" Lady—"Very true; but your presence makes me forget it."
