"And her age?" "Seventy years," again she prompt ly answered. "What is your name?"

"Jane Raney." "How old are you?" "One hundred an I seventeen."

"And you are looking for your lost child, who is seventy years old?" "Yes, Captain; you see Becky will go on sprees. Last Friday my gal went to the Dispensary to get some medicine, and never come home since. She will go on sprees." Sergeant Watkins informed Jane that the officers had brought m no "young one" of that name and age. After finishing her business with the Sergeant, the reporter approached her, and the following conversation ensued: "How old did you say you were?" "One hundred and seventeen."

"And your lost daughter Becky?" "Seventy." "Why, you do not look so old-you
