

SOMETIMES

BY EUGENE L. THORPE

Sometimes in my life's early morning, Sweet dreams of a future I have seen; Dreams of a future I have seen...

Blockade Running

The ex-blockade-runner was hardly recognizable when the Times man again encountered him. A serviceable winter suit and overcoat were substituted for the timorous attire in which he had last appeared.

and return to the armies in the field. He would not be argued out of this, so I parted with him for the last time, as it proved. He managed to get back into the Confederacy a few days afterwards.

Confederate army, was regarded as conclusive proof that I was a spy. The letters, too, were arrayed against me. My counsel argued in vain that even though I had agreed to carry the letters it should not be regarded as a serious offense.

A Whipping Match. The great attraction of Brittany is "the peasantry," no wonder, for they are quite sui generis quite different from all other populations. They combine the sombre, taciturn nature of the Spaniard with the droll, wild life of the Irish.

Sayings, and Who First Said Them. Many of our common sayings, so trite and pithy, are used without the least idea from whose mouth or pen they first originated. Probably the works of Shakespeare furnish us with more of these familiar maxims than any other writer.

The Ex-Empress Eugenie's Mother. The marriage of her daughter with the late Emperor Napoleon III, is the Countess de Montijo's chief claim upon the attention of the newspapers. Otherwise probably the lady would have died and been buried with little foreign notice of these mournful events.

He who drinks and goes away. Will live to drink another day. But he who drinks between his drinks Right quickly in the gutter sinks.
