Famously Taken In

"I got famously taken in on that occasion," said the duke. "The troop had taken to plundering a good deal. It was necessary to stop it and I issued an order announcing that the first man taken in the act should be hanged on the spot. One day, just as we were sitting down to dinner, three men were brought to the door of my tent by the provost. The case against them was clear, and I had nothing for it but to desire that they should be taken away and hanged in some place where they might be seen by the whole column on its march the next day. I had a good many guests with me on that occasion, among the rest, I think, Lord Nugent. They seemed dreadfully shocked, and could not eat their dinner. I didn't like it much myself, but as I told them, I had no time to indulge my feelings; I must do my duty. Well the dinner went off rather gravely; and next morning, sure enough, three men in uniform were seen hanging from the branches of a tree close to the high road. It was a terrible example and produced the desired effect: there was no more plundering; when, some months after, I learned that one of my staff took counsel with Dr. Hume, and as three men had just died in the hospital they hung them up and let the three culprits return to their regiments. "Wasn't you very angry, duke?" "Well, I suppose I was at first, but as I had no wish to take the poor fellow's lives and only wanted the example, and as the example had the effect, my anger soon died out, and confess to you that I am very glad now that the three lives were spared."

Water as Fuel.

Detroit Free Press.

Dr. A. F. Jennings, who during the past six years has been in the Lake Superior mining country was in this city at the house of his brother, No. 697 Cass Avenue, for a short time past, and left for Chicago last evening, his mission being the development of an enterprise which if it proves successful, will be one of the greatest inventions of the age. During the past ten or twelve years Dr. Jennings has been constantly studying the old problem of utilizing water as fuel. How nearly accomplished is the effort the Dr. does not now care to state, except to say that the demonstrations he has already made have been satisfactory to that extent that capitalists are satisfied that water can be used as fuel, and have contributed means to perfect the invention. It is the old, old theory," said the doctor to the reporter of the Free Press, "of reducing water to its original elements and then uniting them in such a way that they will burn, only I am confident that my work, which begins where all previous efforts stopped, will in the end prove entirely successful, and that within the next year you will, if you live, hear of water being used in place of coal and wood."

A Question of Denomination.

One of the assistants at the post-office happened to be standing near one of the delivery windows the other day when a buxom damsel of about 18 summers stepped up and asked if stamps were sold here. Upon being told that they were, she said she wanted to buy one dollar's worth.

"One dollar's worth," repeated the smiling assistant; "of what denomination?"

The damsel showed signs of embarrassment and hesitated to reply. She twirled her shawl fringes nervously, cast her eyes about to see if any was near, moved a little closer to the window, and finally asked in a timid voice:

"Do you help to write it down?"

"By no means," answered the courteous assistant; "that is not necessary but I presume you have some preference as to denomination?"

"Ah—well—yes," replied the stranger her face turning scarlet. "I've some. I generally go to the Episcopal Methodist myself, but the fellow I'm buying the stamps for he's a Universalist Orthodox."
