A WESTERN STORY.

as I know of no better way in which to spend the long evening before us, I will do so on one condition. Each must try his hand at it when 1 am through.

We were weather-bound at a rude Western inn, almost upon the verge of western hin, atmost upon the verge of civilization. The day just passed had been a stormy one, and we had to go through it as best we could. Now, as the darkness came on early and the long the daraness came on early and the long evening loomed up before us, we gather-ed about the rearing fire of huge logs, which burned bravely upon the hearth, and prepared to pass it away by story telling, a device to which travelers in our situation are always prone to resort.

The one who had been appealed to for the first story, was a man of some 50 years of age, who had followed the occupation of a peddler. He had the best turnout in the stable which that part of the country had ever seen in his line, though he had told us that he once had for years carried a pack on his back. But by his own exertions and industry he had risen above that now, and had a snug sum laid up against the time when he should give up his business, and take the remaining years of his life in an easier

We gave our consent to his conditions, and he at once commenced his story.

"It is now nearly fifteen years ago that the adventure befell me which I am my mind was a villain, in the tavern, the night before, and whom I feared all the forenoon, might be following me. The presentment I had had was not groundless, then. But I had not counted upon a double danger.

"Cautiously the villain crept toward me, with a murderous look in the face. A glance showed me that one thing was evident. The villain, while he sought to murder me, was not aware of his own danger; for the panther no longer kept his eyes fixed upon me. It was watching every motion of the villain, and each instant I was expecting that it would leap down upon him. "If it would only do so before he reached my side, it would prove my salvation.

"Closer and closer the villain drew toward me. Only a moment more, and he would be so near me that he could There was not an instant to be lost, and buried deep in his flesh. A terrible cry of terror and rage burst from his lips as he went down, with his blood dying the about to relate. "It was before I gave up my pack for a horse and cart, though I had already made up my mind that I could afford it. "It was before I gave up my pack for a he went down, with his blood dying the earth. At the same instant I was upon my feet, and drawing a pistol, I sent a country-wilder, if possible, than did its work well, though even in death this around here. Between the setthements there were long stretches at last its struggles were over, I pulled it from the bleeding man, I saw it had of forest filled with wild beasts, it from the bleeding man, I saw it had and now and then you came upon a band also done its work. The impress of death was on the villain's face, and in a few moments he was dead.

"I left them both lying there, and hurried on to the next settlement, where

This was built, as Pliny says, on a soft foundation to guard against the shocks the place, and among them was one whom I at once set down as a villain. His looks plainly showed that there was little he would hesitate to do, if in the end there was anything to gain. Again and again I caught him looking at my pack, which I had placed in one corner of the were many the state at the shore of the state of the st room, near the bar; and at once 1 felt sure he was looking at me as though cal-Superstructure bears all evidences of an Superstructure bears all evidences of an edifice which was destroyed eight times, and took 280 years in building and re-building. As I left the settlement behind me, I could not help glancing about to make sure that the man of whom I had formed so poor an opinion was not following me; but he was not to be seen. I Here is the place where St. Paul excited the commotion among the silver and brass smiths who worked for the temple; and over the way was the theater, into which the people rushed, carrying with them Gaius and Aristarchus, Paul's companions. Hence they had a full view of the magnificent front of the temple, which they pointed out as that "which all nature worshipeth" and in their enthusiasm they cried out,"Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" to whom such a temple belonged.

tem formerly of Hallock's Medical In-stitute, Boston Massachusetts, now permanently located at the corner of Second and Ash Streets, Portland, Oregon, two blocks from the O. S. N. Co's landing at the foot of Ash street, Dr. McLennan has by his unwearied attention and extraordinary success, gained a reputation which calls patients from all parts of the country to obtain advice. And without beasting, he can say that probably no other physician on the Pa-cific Coast is treating at the present time so many cases of chronic diseases. The development of important and superior remedial agents and modes of cure have enabled him to succeed in thousands of cases where others have failed. The unparalleled success with which Dr. McLennan has treated difficult and the so-called "incurable cases," goes to show that no one should give up in despair, simply on the assertion of one, two or three physicians, who had failed to effect a cure. It is with the hope of reaching many of this class that I advertise, and not alone from the profit it may deservedly yield me, but for the real satis faction of doing good, and relieving the pains of humanity and sending hope to the hearts of thousands of afflicted fellow creatures who are enduring great suffering under the erroneous im-pression that they are beyond human skill. According to the Roman law, if a man was hurt by a tame animal, as by a vicious horse or a dangerous bull, the owner afforded satisfaction by the surrender of relish I had for the bread and meat the animal. The same rule extended to a man's slave, and also to his son, both when the generous supply disappeared of whom were regarded by the Roman law as his chattels. The Burgundian medieval law enacted that, where one tame animal was hurt by another, the offending animal was to be surrendered.
