Whiteaker Speaks.

T. A. Sutherland, the Standard's sprightly correspondent at Washington, gives the following report of Representative Whiteaker's humorous speech for holding the National Democratic Convention, in Eugene:

At the convention there were representatives from almost every city in the Union, wanting for selfish reasons, the Democratic convention within their limit: It grew to be a perfect farce, and catching the spirit of the thing, it was then that Gov. Whiteaker jumped up and made that ironical speech of his that was spoken of by the associated press agent as being so humorous. He fairly captured the convention, and was cheered and applauded all through it, his remarks fitting so nicely and being so clearly original. I do not pretend to give anything like a correct report of his speech, but it was something after this style:

For some inscrutable reasons there appears to be no delegation here to represent the very just claims of Eugene City, in Oregon to have the next democratic convention. I do not deem it necessary to enter into any extended argument, nor call your attention to the petrifaction that Oregon has never yet had a national democratic convention within her boundaries. To show to this body why it should meet at my home, I will not refer to the delights of a Pullman palace car trip across the state, flat (very) and unprofitable country between Omaha and God's foot stool, nor dilate on the exuberance of the atmosphere of Oregon, but it must be patent to all the world "and the rest of mankind" that Eugene is the proper place. It is the center of civilization on the American continent, just as Boston, with its Atlantic Monthly and Papyrus Club, was before the foundation of this new Athens. We do not ask it because we need it to assist us to carry that State in the next presidential election for we will carry that state for the democratic nominee, let that convention be held where it may. Much has been said by those who advocate other places, about their towns, villages, hamlets and railroad stations on the route to Eugene—such as St. Louis, Chicago, Boston, Washington and New York—and about their superior accommodations, all claiming to be able to seat 10,000 men—and furnish standing room for twice that number. I say to you Mr. Chairman, that we of Eugene City can furnish standing room for 100,000,000 men having the whole Willamette valley before us and the wide expanse of Heaven above us for a roof. As to the moderate charges spoken of by gentlemen here representing different localities: I say to you and to the country at large, that each Democratic delegate who goes to Eugene City for the purpose of nominating a presidential candidate, and who will bring with him his blanket, we will furnish with salmon and water. You can live without cost in Eugene (if you are not known) and I can assure you that at the season of the year when the convention is to meet there is not a cloud to obscure the placid magnificence of an Oregon sky—weather reports to the contrary notwithstanding. Some gentlemen have offered as a reason why the convention should be held at their favor it cities was because there were no presidential aspirants in their states. I am proud to announce, Mr. Chairman, that such is not the case with the friends of Eugene City and the state of Oregon, for we have not less than 200 candidates—all of whom are well qualified for the position—for the Presidency. But it is presumable that they will so neutralize each other at the convention that there will be no possibility of any other than a fair expression of the will of the convention."

[At this place Gov Whiteaker dropped his humorous strain and paid Gen Joseph Lane a very hand some tribute, that I can only imperfectly report.]
"True, we have one noble Roman who towers above all others; a man who is known to many of you personally, and whose name is a part of the history of the country. I mean Gen Joseph Lane, who can safely count upon the Oregon vote for the Presidency—but it is believed that the 199 other candidates who will present their names to the Eugene convention will have to find consolation in constabularies and beer. As to the humanizing or civilizing influences (of which former democratic conventions stood so much in need), Eugene City possesses all the modern improvement. It has its schools, its churches—and other intellectual and moral institutions, where the young idea is taught how to shoot and "spiritual convocation" is freely dispensed, but not dispensed with. The Jacksonville Times says: A cold wind has dried the ground so that farmers are straining every nerve to get in a fair crop. Little work however, has yet been done on "sticky" land, and in some localities, it is probable that nothing but summer following will be done.
W G Kenny, just returned from Josephine county, tells the Times that the Messrs. Winer have "struck it rich" in their hydraulic claim near Waldo. The claim is now well opened and a stratum of gravel, several feet in thickness, that prospects a bit to eight dollars to the cubic yard, has been developed.
The Inland Empire says: Heavy explosions have been heard close to town for the past week, occasioned by blasting out a new foundation for the new machine and car shop of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company. The wheels and running gear of the cars will be here in a few days and work will begin as soon as the shops are roofed in.

Taking Advantage of Leap Year.

Detroit Free Press.

A Detroitier who was out in the country the other day to look after some poultry got stuck in a mud hole although having a light buggy and a strong horse. He got out, took a rail off the fence and was trying to pry the vehicle out, when along came a young woman about twenty-six years of age. She halted, surveyed the situation and said:
"You stand by the horse while I heave on the rail, and don't be afraid of getting mud on your boots."
Their united efforts released the vehicle, and the Detroitier returned thanks and asked her to get in and ride. She hesitated, looked up and down the road, and said:
"Stranger, I'm blunt spoken. Who are you?"
He gave his name and address, and she continued:
"I'm over twenty-five, worth $500 in cash, know all about housework, and this is leap year."
"Yes, I know, but for heaven's sake don't ask me to marry you!" he replied as he saw the drift.
"See here," she continued, looking him square in the eye, "I'm a straight girl wear a No 7 shoe, and I like the looks of you."
"Yes, but don't talk that way to me."
"Stranger, its leap year, and I'm going to pop! Will you have me or no?"
"I—I'm already married!" he faltered.
"Honest Injun."
"Yes."
"Well, that settles me, and I won't ride. I'll take a cut across the field over to old Spooner's. He's got four sons and a fool nephew, and I'll begin on the old man and pop the crowd down to the idiot, for I've slummed around this world just as long as I'm going to! Good by, sir—no harm done."

John Sherman and Resumption.

Ex-Senator Dorsey, of Alabama, is one of the stalwart band who does not take kindly to the scheme of John Sherman to convert the Treasury of the United States to promote his own aspirations to the Presidency and he exposes the shameless falsehood of the crafty and corrupt Secretary in regard to Resumption, of which John Sherman now claims the paternity and all credit incidental to its operations and its effect upon the country. Mr. Dorsey declares that John Sherman was strongly opposed to the Resumption Act when it passed. He was then in the Senate. Against his protest the Bill was adopted in a caucus of Republican Senator, and it was with great reluctance that he reported the bill to the Senate in obedience to the instructions of the Finance Committee. During the debate on the bill, as reported, he dared not to oppose it, but he said no word in its support, and it was suspected among his party brethren in Congress that he would have been better pleased had the bill failed. This revelation will not help John Sherman's "little boom" at Chicago.

Upon the Same Level.

Grant stands upon the same level, the Detroit Free Press declares, with Blaine and Sherman. If nominated, he will, like them, have friends to reward and enemies to punish. All pretense of an unsought, unbought honor has disappeared. He must get down into the dust of the arena, and sweat and toil with the best or the worst of them. The party cannot, if it would, tender him its vote on a silver salver, and wish him many happy returns of the day. He or his friends must grab and grub for it, or they will lose it in any event, but if they gain it, it is to be gained, badly stained, torn, soiled with the marks of the conflict.

The flower girls on the boulevards of Paris, who are not numerous, have an odd way of disposing of their simple bouquets. They suddenly present themselves before ladies and gentlemen likely to buy—the English and American have their chief attention—make a curtsy and with a "Pardon, madame," or "Monsieur," they insert their bouquet in dress or coat, and retreat. Making a short detour they present themselves again for payment. To refuse the moderate sum demanded, or return the bouquet under such circumstances, would be out of the question.

The Asterian says the Columbia bar tugs are No. 1.
