Work of the "Fifteen."

Some days since a farmer's wagon, containing father, mother, son and two or three neighbors, drove up to a stationer's in Detroit, and the son went in and bought the puzzle known as "15"

Even before the wagon drove off the old man had the cover off the box, and was working away like an engine to solve the thing. Yesterday the son returned with the box in his pocket. He had a black eye and awful lonesome look, and when he came to be waited on, he said:

"You know you sold me this puzzle the other day?"

"Yes, I guess we did."

"Well, we hadn't got a mile out of town 'fore dad and a neighbor pulled hair over it. While I was doing up the chores dad and mam called each other cheats. After supper we had a regular three cornered, and the old man got his thumb unjointed and went to bed. Mam and I set up till she hit me with a stick of wood, and then I went to bed. She set up till she got mad and drove the cat out doors and upset the lamp. Do you hear?"

"Yes."

"Well, next morning I caught dad cheating and we had a little shindy. Then he caught mam cheating, and then they had a little shindy. Then the Overseer of Highways came along and worked at it half a day, and he and I got into a row, and he blacked my eye. We took it to a barn raising and the crowd had an awful fight. We took it to a dance and both fiddlers were almost killed. It has been kicked over the house, flung down the well and jumped on in the middle of the road, and now I came in to see if I couldn't swap it for something else. I guess it's a sort of dander raiser anyhow, and I guess, if you don't care very much, I'll take it back and I'll take a telephone in its place."

Sixty Thousand Dollars.

The statement of Kearney's counsel that he was unable to pay the fine of $1,000 was not endorsed by Kearney himself at the house of correction, nor is it in accord with authentic reports concerning the pecuniary profit that his business of "agitating" has brought him in. Before the late W. S. O'Brien died, acting entirely independently of the firm and being enraged at an attack made on him by Kearney on the first flush of the latter's prominence he is said to have dashed off a check of $10,000 for Kearney, saying, "It's cheaper to buy the ——— than bother with him!" Kearney received $15,000 during the gubernatorial campaign for keeping White in the field. He received from $15,000 to $20,000 during the New Constitution campaign for his apathy during the last six weeks before election. In fact, as near as can be estimated his pecuniary profits are in the vicinity of $60,000. At the House of Correction when asked if he were able to pay his $1,000 fine he answered evasively. As no imprisonment excepting the six months' which began with his incarceration yesterday, can be enforced until the fine is paid, and as the collection of the amount must be by civil process, the exact status of Kearney as a capitalist becomes an interesting question. The certainty is, however, that his profitable career during the past three years will very well permit him rest and retirement. As soon as the weather permits resumption of work on the road and at the quarry Kearney will be set at labor with the rest.—Chronicle.

The Rich Horse-Fanciers of New York.

William Astor has just sold his racers, and has retired from the turf. He has become weary of the expense and annoyance inseparable from such pursuits. A man must have a natural love of horses to adhere to equine amusements.

Astor only took it up as an imitator of Belmont and Bonner. The latter, however, have a well known passion for such animals, which explains their lavish expenditure. Bonner's outlay for taking care of 100 fine horses is not less than $20,000 a year. When you add to this the interest on the estimated value of the animals (300,000), you have an expense equal to $40,000 per year.

A NICE TIME.—An exchange says: "Doves quarrel more than eagles." No doubt of it; but then, from what may be seen of the doves, they have such a nice time when they make up, and that accounts for the quarreling.

SHE MIGHT.—When a New Yorker hears his wife call him at the telephone, he tells the boy to say he is out for if he answered, hang it she might smell his breath."

Kittitas valley, in Yakima county, W. T., is a regular paradise, well watered, very fertile and nearly surrounded with hills covered with oak, pine, fir, cedar, etc., and there are homes yet for thousands.
