

There will be an October election in Indiana after all. The supreme court of the state has decided that the constitutional amendment recently adopted, fixing the time for holding the general election for the first Tuesday in November—the time of the presidential election—was not legally carried. This will be bad news for department clerks and other government employees; for the Republican campaign managers will now begin to pour money into Indiana—and a prerequisite will be the immediate levy of an assessment.

From Dry creek, Unadilla county: We are having a trying time with the grasshoppers in this neighborhood. They are destroying all the gardens in the country. We notice some wheat burning up but think it is not unusually bad. Most of the barley is out of danger. Oats and corn look well. Beans and tomatoes are not a favorite with grasshoppers. They are fond of potatoes, onions, raspberries, currants and strawberries.

From the books of the last census enumerators, says the Lakewick Herald, we discover that the population of Goose Lake is now 1,650. This includes the entire valley in both States, from the extreme south end to the northern limit. The population of that portion of the valley north of the California line is about 550, and that of the section south of the line about 650.
