The Tramp's Story.

"Say, pard you've stood by me through thick and thin, you have. It'll be one white spot on yer book in the next world, that will. Raise my head up, there, that'll do, old pard. You and I, we've been a long time on the same

"Aye, that we have, Joe." "Do you know, pard, I'm going on long tramp in a little while?" "You? why, where, Joe? You and I can't give up the road now?" "Ah, yes, pard, we must; you'll stay ere. Those rains—the cold, wet garments-they've done the job for me, pard. I'm going to apply at a new door in a short while.

"Why, you're sick, Joe. You'll have to rest here in this old barn till I can brace up your tired body a bit."

"Ah, friend, I've no need for bodily rest now. It is the soul, the mind that is heavy. I've kept up as long as I could, pard. But I didn't want to give outtill I reached this spot."

"Why, Joe, what do you mean-have you ever been here before?"

"Before! Come, pard! I'll tell you something. Do you see those beams up there? Yes; well, when I was a boy I've played many a time tag up there on the same beams. Those holes cut in the clap-boards up there under the eaves-I cat for my doves. Open the barn door there, that'll do. Do you see that little red house there at the further end of the lot? I was born in that house-yes, I was. I've felt this body growing weaker every day, pard; but I kept up-I wanted to die near the old home."

"Old home, Joe?" "Yes, this was the home of my boyhood. Here in this barn I've helped my father thresh many a bushel of wheat. I've pulled the wagon out of the corner many a Sunday morning, hitched the team to it, and took the old folks to church. It was too good to last long, pard. I must go to the city, I thought. When I left the dear old home I was honest; yes, honest-and would wrong no man of a cent, knowingly."

"Well, I went to the city. I went into ways of temptation, and I fell. The old folks at home grew worried-and I, God help me, went from bad to worse. I forged my employer's name to the check—was dectected, and sent up for four years. They told me of my mother's death after she had heard of my fall. I served the term out; I could get no work—you know how that is. To-day, when we came past the graveyard, you'll remember I stopped at two graves -mother and father-both gone. That's all-I'm h-happy-now. I can-see the old-home-and-and-dark-mother-

Joe, the tramp, was dead—dead with his eyes fixed upon his old home -- and his pard went out into the world-

PROF. FANNING IS CORRECT,-"No, gentleman, says the Professor, "ever gives a military salute to a lady." Well, hardly; we should say he wouldn't. The military salute differs from a simple, graceful wave of the hand to three ruffles of the drum's color, trumpets sounding the flourish and arms presented, and so on up to the President, who is entitled to a salute of twenty-one guns, and the "highest honors-all standards and colors dropping, officers and troops saluting, drums beating, and trumpets sounding." Now, if the gentlemen of America get into the habit of raising such a racket that every time they met a lady, it would be rather more startling than a chronic Fourth of July. Professor Fanning is correct. This sort of thing should be discouraged.

Soft-bearted grandpaps to Tommy, who has just been castigated by his mamma, "And you know, Tommy, it really hurts mamma more than it does you," Tommy—"I know it does, she says it hurts her hands."

The Torments of Office. General Hancock is having his revenge on Garfield now. He can rest in peace in his home on Governor's Island, and think how the life of Garfield is being worn out of him by an army of tramp office seekers. An endless procession of would-be postmasters, Indian agents, port collectors, consuls and the Lord knows what all, are making their way to Mentor, and all have letters or documents which must be read, and all must be well treated, and this, if the man lives that long, must be borne with every day for four years to come. It must be a sorry thought to a man, after having climbed to the top of glory's stairs, to find that even there he is not secure against the herd that scramble for, and fight over the bones that it is in his power to toss to them. And how jolly it must be for Hancock to sit in his quiet office into which none intrude except his friends and, to feel that he is master of all around him, and that his effice does not give any portion of the people a right to annoy and bullirag him. The office of President is very glorious to look forward to; it is no doubt a pleasure, for those who survive it to look back to; but while it lasts it must be full of more annoyances that the storming of a yellow-jacket's nest. And this leads back to the thought of the miserable lives of the thousands who depend upon getting offices or appointments under the Government for a living. As a rule it is the most unsatisfactory life that any man can lead. The salaries are no more than can be obtained in the other walks of life, and when a change comes, the unfortunate man has to begin life anew with his mind unfitted for the work before him. In the Departments at Washington are thousands of clerks who have held office there from two to twenty years. Were they to lose their places tomorrow, they would be utterly helpless. Going up higher, to those of-fices to which honors and emoluments attach, and they are almost as barren of results. Take the honorable position of Member of Congress, for instance, and no poor man can afford to accept it. There is a scramble and and an expense to reach it in the first place; then, if a man is as true as the stars, and as pure as chastity itself, there will be a throng of strikers forever after him and ready at all times to assail him if in the interest of the country he denies their requests. And then if he serves his constituents faithfully the chances are fifty to one that at the next election he will be beaten. If for no other reason, enough envious ones of his own party, who fear he is making for himself an honorable name, will scratch him. Then he will have to gather up the broken large acquaintance all over the state and strands of his business and start thal is a reliable dealer and is well posted anew. The thought above all others should be impressed upon the chase any article for persons in the counmind of the youth of America, that try, and we are sure he will execute comthe life of the politician is the hardest that any man can choose, and for we can guarantee his honesty. Mr. the struggle to make a living out of Blumenthal will fill any order for country obtaining and holding office is at customers on short notice. once the most unsatisfactory and the most demoralizing that can be chosen.

SHORT BITS.

"What a blessing it is," said a hard working Irishman, "that night niver comes on till late in the day, whin a man is tired and can't work any at all at all. A child of six or seven, sitting on a visitor's knee, remarked to her mother: "I like sitting on gentlemen's knees better than on ladies', don't you, mamma?' As Jared Dingman was shaking $1500 in gold under the nose of a steam tug owner on the Detroit river, endeavoring to tempt him to take that amount for his boat, the tug struck a steamer and the glittering gold was the property of the fishes. Elder sister: "You should make friends again. It is absurd for an engaged pair to quarrel." Laura: "Well, then, let Edgar say the first word. Edgar (with a lively recollection of the recent tiff): "Yes, so long as you have the last you don't care."

Governess: "Why do you not say your prayers in the morning, Tom?" Tom (eight years old): "Well, you see, when I go to bed I ask God to take care of me whilst I am askers, but here." of me whilst I am asleep; but, when I'm awake, there's no need, because any little boy of my age can take care of himself then.' "I want to see the villain who wrote this article. Where's the proprietor of this paper?" "He's out." "Where's the managing editor?" "He's out." "Where's the city editor?" "He's out." Where's the reporter?" "He's out." 'Where'm I?" (Ricketty slam-bangjam! Two panes of glass broken.)

"You're out." Man found on sidewalk and carried to hospital. Verdict: Struck by lightning. Still they will do it.

Says the New York Commercial Advertiser: "The Buffalo Express wants to know who invented kissing. We don't think it was ever invented; it just came kind o' natural, like a shock of sugarcoated electricity. To Whomit May Concern:
I take a great pleasure in making the following statement: I have been affected with a disease of the kidneys for the past two years and have tried numerous remedies with only partial and temporary relief. Warner's Safe Kidney and laver Cure was recommended to me, and after taking it the pain and distress left me, and I am to-day feeling strong and well. I am perfectly satisfied that Warner's Safe Kidney Cure is the medicine needed, and can cheerfully recommend it to others.
