

THE EUGENE CITY GUARD

EUGENE CITY, OREGON.

Edited.

Arthur Murphy expiated the crime of murder at Pendleton Jan. 14, for the killing of T. D. French. From the East Oregonian we take the account of the execution as follows:

The night preceding his execution he spent with his spiritual advisers in a room of the Court House adjoining the Sheriff's office. Early the next morning he sent for L. B. Cox and requested that he would read a farewell address, which he had prepared, for him upon the scaffold. He was at this time calm and resigned, had eaten but little, and was engaged in his religious devotions. During the whole day the jail yard was very much crowded with many morbid curiosity seekers, among them we regret to say were women inspecting the scaffold, etc. At the scene of the execution there was a large crowd present—a number within the jail yard, and very many on the outside—Just before three P. M. the condemned man walked into the jail yard accompanied by Father Conrady and Sheriff Martin: He was dressed in a black broadcloth suit of clothes with white shirt, collar and white silk necktie, wearing a large black slouch hat and embroidered slippers. He walked up the steps firmly and alone remove his hat and took his seat on the bench there provided. The death warrant was then read to him and he was asked if he had anything to say why the sentence should not be carried into execution, he replied that he had not, but requested L. B. Cox to read his statement above referred to, which Mr. Cox did, it being the same as published at length in another column in accordance with his wishes. This having been completed the appropriate religious exercises were gone through with by Father Conrady and himself when he stepped upon the trap and the rope was adjusted on his neck, he requested that it be drawn a little tighter. Then an attendant began to pinion his legs. L. B. Cox stepped up and shook hands with him bidding him farewell; at this point his arms were taken hold of to be bound when he remarked "Let me shake hands with Capt. Martin." (These were the last words he spoke outside of his prayers) Several persons stepped up and shook hands with him after which the black cap was drawn over his head and tied and at a signal from Father Conrady the trap was sprung by the sheriff and Arthur Murphy launched into eternity. At his special request the drop had been made six feet and the neck was broken by the fall. Death seemed instantaneous as not the quiver of a muscle was seen. After 4 minutes 47 seconds, his pulse was pronounced dead by the attending physicians and soon afterward his body was cut down and given to Father Conrady to be buried in the Catholic Cemetery at the agency.

Miners' Families and Mining Towns.

"Well, I am going to leave you," said an old Comstock yesterday, as he offered his hand to your correspondent.

"Where are you off to?"

"Down to Arizona."

"For good?"

"If I fall easy I'll stay where I'm put."

I was astonished. He was a man who had hung on to the Comstock through thick and thin since '61. He had for years been the proprietor of a popular saloon and of the leading faro and keno game. He had been an Alderman, and one of the leaders of the Republican party. His horses have been the fastest, his turnouts the nattiest, and altogether he has been a prominent citizen.

"Is the Comstock played out?" asked the departing prominent citizen.

"Yes, for me. There is nothing in the saloon or game now. The town is gone in."

"How do you account for that?" There seems to be a pretty big population."

"Yes; but it ain't the right kind. You see that row of buildings (waving his hand to indicate one side of C' street). Well, all them rooms upstairs used to be filled with boys. Now the boys all have houses back here on the hill—all got wives and children, and don't appear on the turf nights no more. That's good for them but it's bad for me. Why, if you want to know why the town's gone in, just drop around the schools when the youngsters are being let loose. In the flush of old times a young one was a phenomenon here; now there's thousands of 'em. Well, all them cubs have got to be fed, and the fellows that's got to feed 'em and clothe 'em ain't got any money to throw away. That's good for them but it's bad me. As a citizen I am glad of it of course; but as a matter of business it's just ruin, and I am off for Arizona. It's a new country, and old times will come again."

"You'll open a game?"

"Of course. That's what I am after. I'll prospect around and find a camp that isn't too near the railroad, and open a saloon and give 'em a lay-out."

"Why do you want to get away from the railroad?"

"Why? Because when a town is near the railroad it soon gets filled up with dead-brokes and stiffs. It's easy to get to and get from. Men that travel by stage have got to have money and they're the kind of men that makes a camp hum in my line.—Ez.

Henry Ward Beecher is lecturing on "The reign of the Common People," a class for which Mr. Beecher entertains almost infinitesimal respect, if we are to infer anything from former lectures and discourses, as for instance, when notwithstanding his own great income, he declared that "the workman who could not live and raise a family, on a dollar a day ought to starve."

The first apparent effect is to increase the appetite. It assists digestion, causes the food to assimilate properly, and the absorbents to take up nourishment. It also, by its tonic action, induces more copious and regular evacuations. Its effect on the mucous membrane is such, that easy expectoration is produced; not only is the secretion already deposited in the air passage easily voided, but its collection is carried on in a healthy manner, while the formation of tubercle is retarded.
