The children all tor to take them in hand himself and ran out to save their lives and the scene that followed was terrible. They were lifted into the air from 20 to 30 and selling the sheep to pay for the feet among flying timlers, sidewalk planks and debris from barns and fences, and all fell to the ground senseless. Some had their arms broken, some their heads fractured; and all more or less bruised, but fortunately none were killed. Mr. Bradley's house was taken two feet from its foundation and shattered almost to pieces. It so happened that the family were out visiting or to another must have a certificate of they would have been killed, as a num. inspection and traveling permits from ber of neighboring outhouses and barns an inspector. From here the cyclone raised into the air in the shape of a black cloud and was seen to fall again about three miles distant. It was reported that it struck near the narrow guage railroad, tearing it all to pieces, but we have no definite news at this writing. It was very fortunate that it changed its course as it entered town, as it would have swept the whole city clean, the eastern part of the town not being so thickly settled. The damages are not very heavy, probably $5,000 to property and stock. The injured children have nearly all recovered consciousness and are doing well, with the exception of Mr. Rock, a young man of 21 years of age, who has his arm broken in two places and is also internally injured. He is in a critical condition. Ernest Brown is also very badly hurt and has his skull badly fractured.

Following is a list of those most seriously hurt : Jay K. Barnes, seriously; Bennie Mitchell, slightly; Rosa Mitchell, slightly; Tom Murphy, slightly; Felix Croly, slightly; Antoine Segu re, slightly. Thirty or forty more were bruised.

It was a terrible scene to behold and made the blood run cold to see fathers and mothers picking up their prostrate children from the ditches and muddy holes and from among the debris. The scene will never be forgotten by our citizens and can only be described by those that witessed it as a most terrible and heart-rending calamity.

A Cursons Case.

Apocryphal stories have been in times past told of persons having all the appearance of death, who were in reality only in a trance. But a curious circumstance has just occurred at Baltimore that needs to be accounted for. The daughter of a wealthy German apparently died, and was to have been buried three days thereafter, but the face of the supposed corpse assumed a life-like hue, and seemed to have partly turned on its side. The face continued to grow rosy, and the limbs were no longer cold or stiff. In a few days there was another change; the body became rigid and cold, and several physicians declared that the girl was really dead. The funeral then took place, but the relatives were so uneasy that they visited the vault next day, and were startled to find that the warmth and color had returned to the body. The coffin is left open at the cemetery, and the question whether the girl is dead or sleeping is exercising the community. If it should turn out that she is really dead the extraordinary phenomena presented by the body will puzzle the scientists. If she is only sleeping, that will be a no less difficult matter to intelligently account for. In

A MYSTERIOUS AFFAIR.

An Attempt to Murder W. R. Jackson, of Hillsboro.

From the Hillsboro Independent of recent date we take the following account of a mysterious attempt at mur-

"The town was startled Tuesday morning to hear that W. R. Jackson, an old and wealthy citizen of this place, had been shot during the night while asleep in bed in his house. As many different reports of the affair have gone out we sought an interview with the wounded man and present to our readers Mr. Jackson's account of this singular attempt to assassinate him. Mr. Jackson says that he and his wife went to bed late Monday night. He slept before and his wife behind, as was the custom. He went to sleep, lying with his face and body inclined somewhat to the right side fronting the room. About 7 o'clock in the morning a shot

RANG IN HIS EARS.

When he awoke and found he was shot in the head, and turned to his wife and said, "Ellen, I am shot; go for the doctor; tell Dr. Bailey to come and bring his instruments." Mrs. Jackson ran out, and then Mr. Jackson went out to the yard gate a few steps from the front of the house to see if he could find any tracks, but the blood streamed out of the wound so that it blinded him. Then he hallooed to awaken Mr. Dailey, who lives in Dr. Boyce's old residence, but receiving no response, returned to his bed and lay down to await the arrival of the doctor. He knows he was perfectly sensible all the time, for while he lay there he HEARD THE CLOCK STRIKE Seven and counted the strokes. Dr. Bailey then came and made an examination of the wound by probing it. The doctor says the wound was made with a pistol ball, and that it struck the frontal bone of the head over and just above the right eye, crushing the skull in its course, and can the same side, near the outer angle of the same eye. The wound was powder burnt where the ball entered. The brain was not injured nor the membrane covering it, but the Dr. says the eight of an inch more would have cost the man his life. It is a little singular that no place can be found in the room where the ball lodged.

MR. JACKSON'S THEORY.

Mr Jackson says that he is supposed to have money about him, and that he has heard men prowling about his house of nights at various times. He gives out the impression that this deed was an attempt at robbery, but that the failure to kill him at the first shot and the danger of awaking the neighbors from a prolonged struggle, frightened the assailants away. He says that he had received $500 by express the day before, and that there were one or two persons not connected with the office that knew it. In support of this theory, he says that his wife said that when she went after the doctor either event the case presents a curious she found the outside door open. He thinks that he may not have locked the door when he went to bed, as the door Some weeks since, Wm. Black, who does not close easily, and the bolt may not have entered the guard. He mays he has a DOUBLE-BARRELED SHOTGUN In his bedroom which is always loaded. And he has a derringer, which is a Smith & Wesson seven-shooter. but which he says he never carries, and which he left unloaded, but it was kept in the bedroom, and on examination after he was shot he says every chamber was empty. A gentleman who examined it informed us that one chamber of this derringer had fresh signs of son said he had shot a rat with it a few days previously, having only loaded and discharged one chamber.

Strange it is that warnings often come to men when their doom is impending. Mr. Jackson had beenstrangely nervous for several days previous to this dreadful attack on his life. His bed formerly stood with the head ard the west, opposite an east window, but he changed it about with the head some horrible dreams. Just the other night he dreamed that he was by ered with warm blood.
