A Determined Murderer.

On Sunday, January 30th, George Buchanan entered the house of Mr. Jas. O'Neil, at Che-wa-lah, in Colville valley and delivered some articles he had purchased for Mr. O'Neil. When Buchanan entered, O'Neil, Louise B. Fenwick, Dr. Morgan and Mary and Sophie King were seated at the table eating their dinner. Buchanan was asked to partake of the meal which invitation he accepted. Soon after he was seated at the table Fenwick said, "George, Mary and I are going to get married." Without a word in reply, Buchanan arose, drew his sixshooter and commenced firing. The first shot passed through Mary King's arm and the second through her back near the waist, the third struck Fenwick in the leg and the fourth entered his breast. The fifth shot was aimed at Mr. O'Neil but the murderer missed his mark. The sixth and last charge Buchanan emptied into his own breast and fell dead across the stove. Fenwick died the next night at eight o'clock. Mary's wounds are not serious and she will recover. It seems that Buchanan was deeply in love with Mary and repeatedly asked her to marry him, but she persistently refused; finally, in the desperation of love, he told her that she should never marry any other man on earth. He repeated this threat repeatedly and he did his best to keep his word. Buchanan was an honest, industrious man and engaged in farming. Fenwick was a nephew to J. A. Sims, Indian agent at Colville reservation and Mary King was a native of Colville valley, her father is a Frenchman and her mother a half-breed Indian. Thus ends the tragedy.

The Insane Asylum.

The death of Dr. J. C. Hawthorne, superintendent of the State asylum for the insane, will not, in any manner, interfere with the management of that institution, as the administrators of the estate will assume full control of the same and carry it on under the existing contract, which remains in full force. Dr. S. E. Josephi will succeed to the superintendency, and his long connection with the institution makes the appointment an admirable one in every respect. Owing to his intimate knowledge of the many needs and condition of the unfortunate inmates, his long experience in attending to them, having been connected with the asylum for the past fifteen years, and his well sustained reputation as a physician of more than ordinary merit, all combine in recommending him to the important position, and his appointment will give general satisfaction. It is not probable that any changes will be made, but that all employed in various capacities about the institution will be retained. The administrators of the estate of Dr. Hawthorne will be his wife and Dr. Josephi.

Qualifications.

An old lady walked into a lawyer's office, when the following conversation took place:
Lady—Squire, I called to see if you would like to take this boy and make a lawyer of him.
Lawyer—The boy appears to be rather young, madam, how old is he?
Lady—Seven years, sir.
He is decidedly too young; have you no older boys?
Lady—Oh yes; I have several; but we have concluded to make farmers of the others. I thought this little fellow would make a first rate lawyer, so I called to see if you would take him.
Lawyer.—Oh, madam; he is too young yet to commence the study of the profession; but why do you think this boy better calculated for a lawyer than your other sons?
Lady—Why, you see sir, he is just seven years to-day. When he was only five he'd lie like all nature; when he got to be six he was as sassy and impudent as any creature could be, and now he'll steal anything he can lay his hands on.

People should always marry their opposites. Yes, one of the marrying parties ought to be a man and the other a woman.

Don Platt on Conkling.

God might have made a more despicable wretch than Roscoe Conkling, but he never did. There have been wicked men, but never one who covered his wickedness with such meanness and cowardice.

These words are not written in the impatience of anger. They are selected and printed advisedly, and reflect the feelings of men, even the miserable dependents who run whooping after this creature for the mouldy bread his political favor gives their families.

William Sprague has been overtaken by cruel misfortune. He had fallen, through no fault of his own, from his high estate, socially, politically and commercially. He lost his seat in the Senate, he lost his fortune, and blindly striking out amid the wreck, saw his palaces, equipages, servants, all disappear, and the sunshine sycophants of the hour disappear. He gathered his family and their poor remainings together, and place them in the rude home his creditors could not touch.

This was the home Conkling entered; these were the pitiful circumstances that smoothed his way, and this is the man, the chosen leader of a great faction, the owner of a State, a leading lawmaker in the Senate, who could thus invade such a dwelling and bring shame and misfortune on such a family. If ever there was a doubt of Conkling's criminal intercourse with the wife of William Sprague, Conkling hastened to solve that doubt against the poor lady. He wrote aduress upon her seat in the gallery of the Senate, along the walls of the dim-lit corridor, on her carriage, on her home, and smiled in vain delight when he saw the evil tongued mob fasten upon and read the loathsome word.

Changes in the law of Evidence.

After January 24th a very radical change in the law of evidence, will go into effect. The common law of evidence has long been modified in civil cases, permitting parties to testify in their own behalf; but in many States the law prohibiting defendants from testifying for themselves or co-defendants, is still in force. The United States has modified this law, California has done the same, as have several other States. At the last session of the Oregon Legislature, there were bills prepared by three Senators, all nearly the same on the subject, and there was scarcely any opposition to the passage of the law, which permits any one, regardless of his relation to the crime or to the defendants to testify to any facts in possession of the witness.

Lee Sam, of the Chinese mercantile firm of Coong Ye Loong, returned to this city last evening from Port Townsend in charge of Detective Day, who had been sent after him. Sam was greatly pleased to see the officer, and was not only willing but anxious to return. His flight was not caused by any fear of his white creditors but was owing to the constant dread he was in that he would be foully dealt with by some of his countrymen to whom he was indebted. Immediately after his arrival here last night, he had a short conference with his attorney, Mr. Henry Ach, and several Chinese merchants the result of which was the required bond of $5,000 was promptly furnished and he was released from custody. The arrest of Lee Sam was on a warrant got out by the bank of British North America and not the bank of British Columbia as stated previously.—Standard, February 24.

The testimony of the defendant or his wife, or her husband, or of a co-defendant will stand on a par with that of any other witness, and its effect will depend entirely upon the impression it will produce on the minds of the jury or court taken in connection with the circumstances of each case. Where the law has been tried, lawyers claim that it works very satisfactorily, that parties oftener convict themselves, and parties not guilty are frequently able to throw much light upon the fact. There appears to be no good reason why per sons accused of crime should not be heard as well as their accusers.
