

THE EUGENE CITY GUARD.

EUGENE CITY, OREGON.

A Plea For the Northwest Pacific.

One of the last public acts of Congressman John Whiteaker was a speech made in congress on the River and Harbor appropriation bill, Feb. 15th. In his speech he presented the strongest arguments why the North Pacific coast should be more liberally dealt with by congress, presenting statistics and facts showing our vast and fertile resources, and our need of appropriations to assist in the improvement of our rivers and harbors. He closed his speech as follows:

Mr. Chairman, before I resume my seat I desire to make a few remarks of a somewhat personal character relating to the State I have the honor to represent upon this floor. I entered this house without a colleague. I stand here alone upon this floor, and cannot, like the majority of this body, command the aid of ten, twenty or thirty colleagues to obtain from this House the just demands of the people of my state. I have but little more power than a Delegate, who possesses no vote. As combinations appear to rule in the passage of such acts, standing here alone I am at the mercy of the majority and am powerless to enforce the just demands of my State. The time will soon come, however, when Oregon will not stand alone upon this floor. "Westward the course of empire takes its way," and the State which in less than a quarter of a century has accomplished so much through the energy, industry, and intelligence of her people, will rise to greater heights of prosperity and increased strength in wealth and numbers.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I am through, and in a few days the same may be said of this Forty-sixth Congress. Now is the opportunity to do justice, for what is not now done will remain undone at its close. I have been a quiet, if not a silent member of this House, and have sat at the feet of many Gamaliels who have sought to impart their wisdom to less fortunate members. I trust their labor has not been in vain.

In leaving this Congress I shall gladly return to that retirement from which I was unwillingly called to occupy a seat upon this floor. In going hence from its walls, it will be with the proud satisfaction that at all times and under all circumstances I have endeavored to perform my duties conscientiously, as I have been given to understand it, and in no instance have ever failed to act as I believed would be for the interest of all sections of our common country.

Rapid Railway Progress.

According to the Railway Age, there were 7,207 miles of railway constructed in the United States during the past year, one-third more than in 1879, and nearly three times as great as the line of new track laid down in 1878. While in 1879 the building of railways absorbed $95,000,000 of capital, the new roads constructed in 1880 absorbed $185,000,000. It would appear at first glance at these figures that the country was to be congratulated upon the wonderful extension of our railroad system, and perhaps it is; yet the important question arises as to whether this immense capital can be withdrawn from our trade and industries without affecting them seriously. It is stated that much of the money lately invested on these new roads has in many instances been employed to build competing lines, which must of necessity diminish the earnings of roads already in operation. The new enterprises may be made profitable, but only by greatly lessening the income of roads previously in existence. Still, that very competition will have a largely beneficial side to it. The new roads are being built at an average cost of $30,000 per mile, whilst many of the old ones cost as much as $100,000 per mile. The former can therefore afford to run at a rate that would soon bankrupt the latter. If the people are given the advantage of competition and reduced rates, the country, as a whole, will have no reason to regret the rapid progress of railroad building.

The Democratic Aspinche is the title of a new paper issued at Roseburg. As its name implies it is Democratic, at least as much so as the stalwart Republican Nat. L. Baker, formerly of the Coos Bay Ranger, can make it. Douglas county already has a first-class Democratic organ, the Star, which could be depended upon. We surmise however that the new organ will have the interests of a certain clique of Douglas county always in view.

The Sunday Mercury, is grossly mistaken when it charges that Mr. J. W. Hamilton, the prosecuting attorney of this judicial district, procured his nomination by reason of pledges made to Fink and Gazley. Fink was present at the Albany convention, and steadily opposed the nomination of Mr. Hamilton. The Mercury is subservient to the wishes of its master and does not hesitate to malign and vilify any one who crosses his path. Mr. Hamilton is well known to be an upright and honorable gentleman, and the shafts of the Mercury will fall harmless.

Mahone was elected as a Democrat. He voted for and stamped his State in behalf of the Hancock electors, who received a majority of 44,137 votes, which shows plainly how strongly Democratic Virginia is, and how grossly she is misrepresented by a man who votes with the Republican party. During the campaign, says the Examiner, Mahone stated at all times that he was in entire accord with the National Democracy, and made all the capital he could out of that statement. In regard to a local State issue he was a "Readjuster," or in other words, he was a repudiator. He favored the repudiation of a large portion of the State's indebtedness.

No special session of Congress will be called.
