A Narrow Race.

Cross Bay Mail.

Last week as attorneys Hazard, Siglin and Watson were traveling down the beach in the heavy storm that prevailed Thursday, they passed New river at the mouth not knowing that it was that stream, and passed on to Eloras creek which was much swollen by the rains. Siglin and Watson prudently halted on the bank, but Mr. Hazard, who was riding a small mule belonging to Glenn Aiken, attempted to cross at the edge of the breakers. He had not reached the middle of the stream when his mule sunk in the quick sand; he dismounted and just at that moment a huge breaker came rolling in, literally engulfing both the mule and his rider, and with its receding force carrying them both outward. Mr. Hazard fully appreciated the peril of the situation and commenced a desperate struggle with the elements for life. It was after considerable effort that he reached the high sand bank that had been made by the stream and was assisted by his companions.

The mule was carried to the sea by the water beyond the breakers, two or three hundred yards from shore. No one of the party expected to see him again, but he, true to his muleish nature determined to disappoint them. He kept afloat and a length headed toward shore and swam vigorously. Although the breakers would lift him on their crests and carry him a hundred feet at a casting, he at length reached the shore and came out having been in the water between 30 and 40 minutes.

Mr. Hazard was thoroughly chilled when the party reached C. Sergio's place where they stopped for the night. He was quite sick during the night proceeding with the party next day, feeling that he had received one of the closest calls for eternity that a man can experience and live.

Our Columbia Freshets.

In the last number of Scribner's Monthly is a letter from Prof. W. D. Lyman, of Forest Grove, on the Columbia river risings that is interesting reading. The professor says: "An article entitled Our Rivers, in the issue of Scribner for August, contains an allusion to the Columbia which greatly needs enlargement. It mentions as remarkable, that the Columbia river often rises fifteen feet during the summer floods. This presents so inadequate an idea of our great river that I must call your attention to the fact that during the flood of last summer the Columbia rose at Umatilla about forty five feet; at the Dalles, fifty-one; at the Upper Cascades about sixty; while at Portland, twelve miles from the junction of Willamette and Columbia, the former was backed up to a height of twenty-eight feet above low water mark. At Vancouver where the ordinary width of the Columbia is a mile and a half, the flood extended to a width of six miles. To give some idea of the immensity of waters ensuing from the snows of our great western mountains, I might add that at the Dalles the mass of the river was fifty-one feet thick, a mile wide and moving at the rate of nine miles per hour. For several days it rose at the rate of an inch an hour. Its hourly increase was therefore enough to make a large creek, while its daily increase was just about equivalent to such a river as the Hudson. The Columbia, has, of course, no need to feel jealous of any of the brotherhood of rivers but it would like its eastern friends to know what it really can do in the matter of a freshet."

Decadence of Grant.

It is reported that a number of the subscribers to the Grant Fund object to paying their subscriptions. It is not to be wondered that the admiration of hero worship which overpread the country like an epidemic, dies out. As a soldier he did the country service; as a President, he permitted the Departments to become steeped in corruption, and as a private citizen, he is mixing in petty fights unworthy of one who has held so exalted a position.

A Great Mountain Moving.

One of the mountains near the lower Cascades is sliding into the river at the rate of about one foot a year. A year ago, says the Baker City Reveille, when the original survey was made there was a cut of five feet through solid rock at this point. Eight weeks ago the rock was found to have sunk four and a half feet, and to have been crushed into lumps not more than two inches in diameter. A portion of the grade built a few years ago by the O. R. & N. Co. has sunk out of sight. Several theories have been advanced to account for this sliding of the mountain. The favorite theory is that the mountain rests on shelving bedrock, and as the strong current of the mighty Columbia washes away its base, the top slips down and the superincumbent weight of the earth and rock, three or four thousand feet high, crushes the solid rock beneath. At all events, whatever may be the cause, the indisputable fact remains that the mountain does slide as above stated. Superintendent Hallett in speaking of the matter, remarked: "I could not tell it to a man unless he was on the ground here and saw it. No one would believe the story. Such a thing was never heard of before."

We regret very much to inform our readers says the Dalles Mountaineer that work on the court house has suspended, a number of our taxpayers have commenced a suit against the county judge and commissioners for an injunction restraining them from proceeding any further until the matter can be heard before Judge McArthur. The injunction sets forth that the constitution of the State prohibits a county from running into debt beyond the sum of $5,000, and that this county is now in debt beyond that sum, and that the proceedings of the county court were illegal in trying to create a debt larger than that allowed by the constitution. The petition for the injunction also sets forth that the title of the land upon which the county court proposed building the court house and jail was in dispute.

Another very destructive fire visited Quebec on the night of the 9th. Eight hundred buildings in the principal streets were destroyed. Losses, five lives and $2,000,000. Several remarkable whirlwinds were caused by the fire. Men were in some cases lifted off their feet. On the lower field where most of the burnt out people had camped with their saved goods, the fire followed the unfortunates and burnt up most of the goods piled on the grass. Burning shingles fell over the city and as far out as Maple avenue, endangering every part of town. Several incipient fires in different streets were suppressed by the vigilance of their occupants.

What will caricaturists now do to make General Butler's familiar features appear odious in the pictorial papers? The New York Star says that he recently paid an oculist $1,000 to cut the cords that drew his eye ball toward his nose, thus giving his eye that oblique cast that has for many years been familiar to the public. Butler without his squint would be another man, and afford a fresh subject for the artist. It is as if he had lost individuality, and we are not sure that we shall love the fascinating widow quite so ardently now that his features have become dreadfully symmetrical, you know.

Two passengers, James Waich, a brakeman, and Miss Minnie Wells, a passenger, on the up bound train for Walla Walla, thoughtlessly stuck their heads out of the car window near Wallula, probably to see why the cars were slackening their speed came in violent contact with the projecting timber of a water tank, and both were fatally injured. The Company ought to be prosecuted for manslaughter for placing such dangerous obstructions along their track. At least they ought to be made to pay heavy damages for such culpable management.

Trout fisherman should regard it as a duty to kill every water snake seen along the streams, for they are said to destroy more trout than all the rest of their enemies combined.
