Chas. Guitteau Shoots President Garfield.

Great Excitement at Washington City.

Account of the Shooting.

Guitteau Probably Alone Responsible.

Binine's Account of the Affair. WASHINGTON, July 2 .- This morn ing witnessed a scene unparalleled in the history of the country. The as sassination of Lincoln, coming as itdid. at the close of a long and desperate war, and at the last expiring three of that war-was an infinitely more log ical event than this horror. A dumb horror seems to have taken possession of everybody, and few appear to real forecast the future. A great crowd gathered almost instantly around the Baltimore and Potomac depot in which the President was shot. A hundred different and conflicting stories of the manner of the shooting and of its effect spread like wild fire through the city. By common consent business was sus pended in the shops and stores as well as in the public offices, and the population of Washington emptied itself into the streets and gathered at the corners to listen to the newest tale told of the tragedy. An account of the shooting given by Secretary Blaine to Judge Shellabarger this afternoon is probably as accurate as any that can be obtained;

The president and Mr. Blaine rode the administration was an unit. When the carriage arrived in front of the it and entered the ladies waiting room, through which they passed arm in arm. Mr. Blaine says that he dropped the president's arm as they were walking through the door into the main room at which instant two shots were fired. Mr. Blaine saw a man running and started toward him, but turned almost immediately and saw that the president had fallen. It was then that 16 first realized that the shots had been fired at the president. He sprang toward him, as did several others and and raised his head from the floor. As the president fell he exclaimed, "My God." At this time Postmaster General James, Secretary Windom and Secretary Lincoln, who had arrived earlier at the train, were promenading on the platform outside. General James says that Colonel Jamieson of the postoffice department rushed out of the depot immediately after the shots were fired and exclaimed "The president is shot!" Either the secretary or another gentleman exclaimed, "Oh, nonsense." Col. Jamieson said. "I saw it." Arthur at the White House. WASHINGTON, July 4 .- This afternoon the vice president drove to the white house. He was received by the cabinet all of whom were there, and they held a conference. The vice president expressed his most profound regret at the occurrence, and said that nothing ever so moved him. He earnestly hoped for the President's recovery and expressed sincere admiration for the president. General Arthur was then ushered into a room where Mrs. Garfield received him. She showed marked emotion, but bore up well. In feeling terms the vice president expressed sympathy for her, and hoped party then rushed back and found the president would recover and enjoy a peaceful and happy administration.

You have my support and that of all patriotic citizens. I would like an audience of a few momenta." He used to seize upon the White House state stationery, take some of it off and write innumerable letters. He would utilize blank cards by writing himself a supply, if he should ever need them and one day Col. Crook, disbursing clerk, said to him, "You seem to make yourself at home and be laying in a suply of stationery." Said Guitteau to him in an insulting manner, "Do you know who I am? I am one of the men who make presidents." Last Tuesday he met one of' the employees and was very particular in inquiring when the president would leave and by what train and road. He has an idiotic grin on his face at times. One day he he said that this was a "hell of a government. The people are no better than slaves."
