Judge Kelsay's First Retainer.

Judge Kelsay, says the Jacksonville

Sentinel, of Corvallis, gets off the following good thing on himself, and its moral may be pondered by all legal fledgling with profit. Asking the status of a case in Southern Oregon, in which he had been engaged, he was informed that two local attorneys were now conducting it. "Ah, ah," replied the judge with a twinkle in his eye, "that reminds me, if you please, of my first retainer." "How so," we ventured to enquire. "Well," replied the old jurist, "I had just graduated from a Kentucky law school with fine honors—head of my class, sir, crammed and boiling over with legal lore spilling, sir, for a gladiatorial struggle, so to speak if you please in the forensic

"a murder was committed in my county a most atrocious crime; the murderer was prominent and wealthy and at once employed two of the ablest lawyers in Kentucky to defend him.

Think of my surprise, sir, when I was called on and my services retained for the defense by the deposit of fifty dollars. I was proud, sir,—justly proud, but unable to satisfy myself whether the retainer was to secure my valuable assistance for the accused or to prevent it being obtained by the prosecution.

Time went on, blows were given and parried by the senior counsel without consulting me and I kept wondering what very important part I was to perform and the more I thought of it the more mysterious did my position become. At last a change of venue was obtained and the leading counsel Col-came to me and asked me to take a walk. That, sir, was the proudest moment of my life; we walked on without a word, but my heart was swollen up like a big water melon, if you please, and I had a vision of a grand scene where I had just finished a brilliant peroration that extinguished the State's attorney and melted the jury to tears. I had just imagined myself carried in triumph out of the court house by the friends of the discharged prisoner, when we approached an out house. Taking me behind it, the able counsel looked stealthily around to see that no one would hear our important secrets. 'Mr. Kelsay,' he said said in a grave tone, 'we have a very bad, a desperate case, an almost hopeless, and the time has arrived when you are expected to perform a most
