The ship Gatherer arrived at San Fran-eisco on the 15th from Wilmington, and Captain Sparks was arrested. He refused to make any statement, saying simply he is innocent of the charges. He showed some disposition to make fight when arrested but the showing of the marshal's pistol quieted him.

The steamer Anjerhead brought to San Francisco some 10 or 12 Chinese women, five of whom were discovered to be courtesans. According to the law of 1875, seemd by going down a smooth perpen-no person can be brought from China for dicular surface. I do not doubt of their immoral or criminal purposes, and such being the fact the authorities promptly notified the women they would not be permitted to land. They will be sent back to China on the same steamer.

A tornado passed over San Mateo at 8:30. The course of the tornado was from south to north. It first struck the residence of John Parrett, moving his hot house two feet on its foundation, and next struck the Episcopal church, taking off about one-fourth of its roof and taking in its course trees and fences for a space of about one hundred yards wide, crushing and twisting everything in a fearful manner. No lives lost.

Considerable sensation is created by the fact that the Union Pacific began on the 15th to discharge a number of conductors, among whom are numerous oldtimers and popular men. It is claimed Pinkerton's detectives have been working main lines and branches since last August, and recently turned into headquarters a voluminous report, upon which the present discharge of conductors is based. No other reason for discharge is given than that their services are no longer wanted, and it is supposed it is from the usual cause in the case of conductors. There are 375 passenger and freight conductors employed by the Union Pacific on the main line and branches, and it is reported that at least 150 are to be discharged. Six on the eastern division running out of Omaba were let out on the loths It is said out of 28 conductors on this division, all but two or three will be lef out, and all but one or two on the mountain division, and Julesburg branch to Denver will fellow suit. Also all but two or three running between Grand Island and North Platte. Several brakemen have already been promoted to va-cant conductorships. It will take some by their only proper antidetes, occupa-little time to complete the change.

The Way of a Scrpent.

The movement of a snake in climbing perpendicular surface, as I have observed it, is a vermicular, undulating motion, not spiral, but straight up from the surface. I have seen a black snake thus glide up a beech tree with the easy, careless grace of movement which is characteristic of that snake when moving over horizontal surfaces. The bark of the beech affords few inequalities into which the edges of the gastroslegal bands could be thrust claw fa-hien, and I have no doubt that atmospheric pressure is the force that holds the snake against such surfaces in climbing, sacker fashion, as the boy lifts the brick with the piece of wet leather. I once knew a black snake to ascend a stucco wall to the second story, and another I saw go up to the caves of a carriage house to the swallows' nest; straight up and down boards. I have seen them glide from tree to tree and leap down from near the top of large trees, but never saw one deability to do so, however. I do not believe that this power is enjoyed by the copperhead or rattlesnake, or any venomous sort with which I am familiar, they being heavy and sluggish in their movements. I have seen them go up on leaning trees and crawl into the foliage of bushes, however.

A KEEN SIMILITUDE.-Sometimes a man will express in a single sentence the substance of a volume, and these sententions utterances are powerful One source of their power is, they are unanswerable A brief, comprehensive pithy similitude cannot be met by argument. It is a picture hung up to view-a demonstra-tion on the blackboard like unto the solution of a mathematical problem. One of the best illustrations of the subject was the answer of Charles James Eox to the French statesman, on the occasion of a discussion upon the comparative sense and wisdom of the French and English character. Said the Frenchman: live in the present. You must admit that. The Frenchman finds joy and satisfaction in the present. He is content to know that in the present he is safe and well; and thence draw the sweets of existence. But the Englishman is continually looking to the future, and about the future, over which he has no control, he tory at Lynn, Mass. exploded on the is forever making himself anxious. Is 15th, leveling the building and killing not the Frenchman the wiser and more sensible of the two?" "He may be the merrier," said Fox, "and may find contentment and joy as doth the butterfly. Did you ever hear of a savage who did not eagerly purchase a mirror in preferman Burrell. Had the accident occurred ence to a telescope? Who could half an hour later the loss of life must answer that last sentence? What a volume of thought there is in it!

Her Annual Marriage

San Francisco society is a good deal like a theater. The worst behavior is generally seen in the highest circles.

This superb criticism is apropos of a remark made by Judge Ferral to a wellknown Nob Hill lady, who petitioned him for a divorce last week:

"Lemme see, "said his bonor musingly. as he put on his nose pinchers and took good look at the petitioner. "Didn't I ivorce you last summer?"

"Yes, Judge," replied the plaintiff, "And also the winter before?" he continued. "Yes, sir," still more faintly.

"And the spring before that?" "I-I-I think so.

'Very well; I'll fix this thing for you this time but mind, it's got to last you cill '83, at least. Don't come before that -understand now."

"I'll remember it Your Honor," she said meekly, but she had hardly gotten out of the court-room before she told her next prospective husband of the regular winter series, that the judge was a nasty thing, and that it would be a cold day when she sent any of her business his way again. Poverty, ignominy, and death are accounted the most formidable trio of mortal calamities. Let us, therefore,

LOVE AT FIRST VIEW.

As Mark Tiffany, a bachelor, and a member of the town school committee, entered the room of the Center Grammar school of Hingham, over which Miss Hanby presided, his eyes feil upon the face of a new scholar, who was regis-tered "Nellie Hunter, eighteen years of

"Remarkably pretty," thought he at the first glance, nor did he change his mind as he sat on the platform the next half hour with his gaze fixed upon her, while he apecared to be talking to Miss Hanby. The fact was, he was a little cross eyed, and it happened to be very convenient to him just then, as Miss Hanby was deluded into the belief that he was looking directly at her, whereas his gaze was fixed fon a far more beautiful object in a different direction. It is not supposed that officials are chosen and paid to visit schools for the purpose of looking at pretty faces by the hour; nor did Mark Tiffany make this a practice. But this girl's face was the ideal one for which he had been looking for many years, and he availed himself of the opportunity to make her personal acquaintance before he left the schoolroom. Miss Hanby made a wry face as he walked around to Nellie's desk, and he walked around to Nellie's desk, and inquired after her studies. But she brightened up as she looked at him and saw, as she thought, those deceptive eyes, still bent upon her, while he was talking to Nellie. Then she congratulated herself on being a schoolmarm with so eligible a bachelor for commit tee man. Still, feeling a little uneasy in regard to the notice he had taken of Nellie, she said to him as he was about to leave:

"Mr. Tiffany, our new scholar is quite a trial to me; being wholly bent on mis-chief, it is impossible for her to learn much, and at the same time she is a great hindrance to the others."

Mr. Tiffany was satisfied that the teacher had some cause for complaint, as turning toward Nellie, though not appearing to notice her, he saw her making grimaces which nearly convulsed a few of the older scholars with laughter. But his only reply to Miss Hanby was: "Well, leave the case in my hands.

will call again soon." The mischievous girl was at that moment making the learned bachelor an object of ridicule. Not but she thought him polished, handsome, and in every respect worthy of admiration; but her extreme love of fun and caricature exceeded all sense of propriety, so much so that there was no object so grand, or scene or theme so sacred, that she could not find some ridiculous feature about it.

Mark Tiffany did not admire this trait in the girl's character, and whenever he visited the school, which was very often, he spent considerable time at her desk in trying to prevail upon her to become more attentive to her studies. But the mischevious eyes and suppressed laughter invariably assured him that there was little heed paid to his counsel. Still he could not relinquish his efforts, since there was never a person for whom he had cared as much.

After awhile Miss Hanby saw she was not the object of attraction to him she once thought herself; and to witness his unflagging interest and devotion to Nellie, seemed more than she could endure. So, becoming angry with her one day, she ordered her to take her books and go home, never to return to that schoolime Mr room again. The next visited the school he was told of her dismissa., and replied, "You have done very wrong, Miss Hanby," and the frown that confronted her predicted her own dissmissal as a teacher in the near fu-

Fearing this she anxiously asked, With your sanction cannot she be re-"I do not give my sanction any such measure. "You must consider that she was very trying, Mr.Tiffany," said the little schoolmistress tearfully.

"No doubt," he replied. "Why, she often laughed right in my face," she continued. "I presume so."

"Still she never was saucy, or obstinately refused to obey me, but was so persistent in her fun." 'Yes, I understand it; she has tried my patience in the same way;" then locking at his watch, he said, "I must be going. Good-day, Miss Hanby."

After he had gone, the look of despair that came into the face of the usually hopeful teacher was noticed by most of her scholars.

"The little jade has stolen his heart from me," thought she, "what is worse, will prevent me from continuing in this school after this term. For it will be just as Tiffany says, and I do not believe se will allow me to remain. How it is that a man of his sense can be so taken up with that foolish girl is more than I can account for.

Miss Hanby's conjectures were not unfounded. With the ending of that term came her note as dismissal as teacher of the school over which she had long presided, a lady who was an entire stranger taking her place. Nellie returned to her deak a little soberer and wiser than be fore, yet full of fun and mischief, and far from a studious girl. Mr. Tiffany, with unabated interest in her welfare kept an oversight of her studies, giving her private lessons in French. Having called at her home a few times, found she was not altogether to blame for her lack of scholarship. Her mather, a vivacious, presty woman, though quite unlearned, and with a slight knowledge, had rather discouraged than encouraged Nellie in her attempts to acquire an education. Often when she caw the girl with a book in her hand, she would say, "There is no sense in a girl's spending her whole time over a book-most of them are little more than trash at the best."

Then Neilie, who, is we have seen, was not over fond of her studies, would throw aside her books and perhaps would not be seen again with one in her mother's presence for a long time

Tiffany saw how maters stood and insisted that whenever he found a dull, unappreciative scholar the blame could be traced back to the parent or parents, who gave the child no time or encouragement to study,
"None of the men that have become distinguished for scholarship have had such mothers whatever their fathers may have been. Why, I have known women to persuade their sens to learn fancy needlework, when they knew every moment they worked at it should have been spent over their books, if they ex- get to the other side.

ected to keep along with their classes. Had the time been spent in muscular exercise for the benefit of their health, there would have been some excuse for them; as it was, there was none, showing them as vapid minds, unfit for the responsibility devolving upon them." These were words of Mark Tiffany and doubtless he was in the right of it.

That Nellie might be under better in-fluences, he pleaded very hard with the mother to allow her to attend a boarding school a couple of terms, which he knew as a model one. She went, and at the end of two years, instead of two terms, was so greatly improved that Mr. Tifany was proud in claiming her as his

Miss Hanby, who still remained unmarried, and was teaching in an inter-mediate school in Hingham, nevertheless declared that it was the most unaccountable thing in the world that so dignified, well educated a man as Mark Tiffany could wish to marry such a rattle-brained girl as Nellie Hunter.

Mrs. Bayes' White House Portrait.

A Washington female correspondent of the New York World thus relives her-

In the White House hang only three portraits of the ladies who have reigned there, one of which, the portrait of Mrs. Hayes—Cousin Lucy to the population of the great State of Ohio—is an ele-phant of great magnitude and difficulty. For many years, perhaps ever since the White House was built, an exquisite por-trait of Martha Washington was hung in the East Boom. It is of extraordinary beauty and by some happy inspiration of the painter (Staurt, I believe) it has an air of grandeur about it that is seldom conveyed to canvas. She was in truth a haughty and beautiful creature, f most unrepublican carriage, and her full length portrait looks down in solitary majesty from the walls of the rom which is the throne room of the republic. With the conspicuous bad taste characteristic of reformers, the Woman's Temperance Union had a full-length portrait of Mrs. Hayes painted, an exact imitation in attitude, and so on, of Martha Washington, and by some occult doings it was hung likewise in the east room. Now, there is an unwritten law that nobody but Martha Washington shall ornament the east room-a law something like the prejudice against the third term-and this law had never been infringed. Mrs. Tyler, the wife of the only President who married in office, left a beautiful girlish portrait of herself at the White House, but hung it modestly in an up-stairs corridor, from which it has never been removed. But as soon as Cousin Lucy left the White House the screaming absurdity of having her portrait in the east room became ludicrously apparent. Just in the nick of time a request came that it should be sent some where—I forget where—to be copied. Here was a way out of a predicament, so off it was sent, and if it had met with an irremediable accident an embarrassing state of affairs might have been avoided. But now comes along the Woman's Temperance Union with a barfaced request to have it placed again in the East Room-only it will never get there any more, as it never should have been there at all. It now stands awkwardly balanced against the wall of the Blue Parlor, and when the President passes it he gives a comical look of dismay at the huge, unwieldy thing. frame is nearly as tall as Trinity church steeple and nearly as big as the new postoffice, and nobody knows what to do They have got it decently out of the East Room, which is so much gained. It would make a very good banner for a temperance procession.

Sermos on the Past and the Future.

My fren's, de past am not de fucher, any more dan day after to-morrer am day befo' yesterday. As time fades so does glory fa.ie. To-day you may march at de head of de purceshun, yer hat on yer ear an' a red sash tied aroun' yer body -to-morrer ye may be in jail fur borrowin' somebody's woodpile to keep yer feet warm. Do not prize de present too highly—do not forget de warnings of de past. We cannot recall de past, but we can look back an' see whar de grocer gin us short weight on codfish, and whar we took advantage of a cloudy day to pass a twenty-cent piece off fur a quarter. My hearers, we should not lib fur de past, but fur de fucher. What am it to us as we riz up in de mawnin' wheder Cresar met his mother-in-law at the depot or forbid her his house? What am it to us as we retire to our humble conches fur de night wheder de orators of Athens greased deir butes or went barfoot? As we sit on a box in de ally to consume our noon day lunch we car' not wheder Brutus dyed his goatee or was clean shaved. But de fucher am big wid events. Today we may be full of sorrer. If so, we hope dat de morrer will bring clam chowder. If de present am full of biles an' chilblains, an' heart-aches, de fucher may be as bright as cat's eyes shinin' out of a bar'l on a dark night. Nebber look back on de past. It am as much gone as a three-cent piece paid out for Fourth of July lemonade. Nebber despair of de fucher. When de heart is heaviest, de fire lowest, an' work de skeercest you may find a lost wallet, or strike some batcher willin' to give credit. My fren's I am dun.
