The number of passengers carried from the same ports to San Francisco during the same years were, in 1880-81, 13,596, and in 1881-82, 18,590, showing an increase of inward over outward travel of 24,948 in the two years named.

Our Minister to Italy.
The appointment of William Waldorf Astor as Minister to Italy recalls some very interesting incidents in the history of that young man's political career. He has aspired for political honors for some time, and about a year ago was nominated for Congress, an event that delighted him beyond measure. All the Astors, indeed, were happy at the thought of getting the family name on the Congressional records. Who could say that William Waldorf might not some day become a great statesman? The family pride was so tickled, in fact, that the head was knocked out of the family barrel—a proceeding most remarkable, when it is known that the head in the Astor barrel is usually hooped down tight, Mr. Astor looks like a young man who would prefer the amusements of fashionable life to political honors, in which respect he differs from Perry Belmont, who is grave and dignified. Well, when the campaign opened he went personally into the canvass with the enthusiasm and industry of a ward politician. He cut a ludicrous figure—your gentleman politician always does. At, tired scrupulously from his hat to his boots, he haunted rum-shops on the east side, and tossed off glasses of brandy-and-water with cart-drivers, longshoremen and dustmen. Of course the rum in these grogeries was vile stuff to go down a delicate gullet, but our political fledgling displayed a heroism of which his friends never dreamed him capable. Whenever the Mulhooly Association of the St. Patrick's Brotherhood would give a ball, our friend went. He made friends of the young bucks who had left their carts, hackstands and stables to have a night of dissipation, and paid bills at the bar with astonishing liberality. The country candidate tries to win his way to popular favor by kissing the babies and bestowing sweetmeats on the children. Our friend, actuated by a similar motive, sought introductions to the plump Irish girls, and whirled them through the intricacies of the waltz. The poor fellow was not accustomed to such coarse clay (for Mary, the housemaid, or Bridget, the cook, does not have a sweet breath), but he went through it all, defiantly holding his nose aloft. All the young women so honored were delighted, and pronounced Mr. Astor a "foine gentleman." But I think the young men could not have been won over by his condescension, for our friend was ignominiously routed at the polls. Wherefore all this discomfort at the balls and of the vile brandy went for nothing. After the election Mr. William Waldorf Astor sank into obscurity, piqued and humiliated, and might have remained in this condition for years to come had not President Arthur (for good reasons known to himself) lifted him out of it.

Lieutenant Schwatka Awarded.
Astorian: When Lieut. Frederick Schwatka, Third cavalry, came to Washington Territory, under orders to join the staff of Gen. Miles at Fort Vancouver, he gave a power of attorney to Wm. P. Haysom to collect from the paymaster general $2,225. Failing in accounting from Haysom, Schwatka had his attorney arrested and discharged $1,000. Under the statutes in force in the district, no criminal suit will hold, and Schwatka's only remedy is by civil suit. The money was of the sum appropriated by Congress near the end of its last session to make up to Schwatka his full army pay during the time he was absent on the Franklin search expedition in the Arctic regions.
PAVING HIS FIRST BILL.—It is said among the first things after married life begins are the bills, and we suppose it was this piece of information which deceived a countryman who, with his bride, stopped at a hotel the other day. At dinner, when the waiter presented a bill of fare, the young man inquired, "What's that?" "Bill of fare, sir," replied the waiter. The countryman took it into his hands, looked inquiringly at his wife and then at the waiter, and finally dived his hand into his pocket and inquired, "How much is it?"
