

Watson Brown's Body.

Dr. Jarvis T. Johnson of Martinsville, Ind., gives the following account of how he came into possession of the body of one of John Brown's sons:

I was the surgeon of the Twenty-seventh Regiment of Indiana Volunteers in the war of 1861, and served in that capacity during the years of 1861 and 1862. In the spring of 1862, General Bank's division moved up the valley of the Shenandoah, and entered the city of Winchester, Va. My regiment was a part of the said division. After we had entered the city I took possession of the medical college situated therein. In the museum of said college I found a large, symmetrical and anatomical human body or frame. It had been well prepared for preservation, and contained all the muscles, arteries and nerves. By permission of General Banks, I took charge of the specimen and removed it to the Academy hospital in Winchester, which hospital was under my control. After its removal to the said hospital, a number of the prominent citizens of Winchester called upon me at the hospital, and each and all declared that it was the remains of a son of John Brown; that the said son had been killed at Harper's Ferry, Va., in October 1859, at the time of the insurrection.

One of the professors of the said college also called upon me in person and demanded that I return the specimen. He then gave me all the details of the manner in which the body had been prepared, and said that he did it himself. He told me that after young Brown was killed at Harper's Ferry, he had the body sent to Winchester, and then, upon consultation with the other professors of the college, it was decided to prepare the body of young Brown that it might be preserved in the museum of the college, as a specimen and an object of interest and note. The professor strongly appealed to me, in the name of my profession and in the interest of the same, and as a friend of science, to return to him the said body. He said that when the war was over the college, which had been burned, would be rebuilt, and that it should be deposited therein. He cited the fact that the sons of John Brown had been killed while engaged with their father in the attempt to overthrow Virginia's cherished institution of slavery, and Virginia was entitled to the body as an object of warning and curiosity. In answer to the demand and appeals of the professor, I said that the memory of John Brown and his sons and their heroic battle at Harper's Ferry for the freedom of the slaves were held in too high esteem for me to leave the body upon the slave soil of Virginia, hence I should send it to the free soil of my own State, Indiana. I afterwards, in the summer of 1862, shipped the said body by express via Franklin, Ind., that point being the nearest express office to my own home, then at Morgantown, Morgan county, Indiana; and the said specimen has been in my possession and under my control ever since, and I have no doubt whatever but that it is the son of the heroic John Brown. I would have notified the mother or brothers of young Brown long ago that I had the body in my possession but for the reason that I was not aware of the fact that there was a brother living, and feared that the information to the mother might simply renew the great mental anguish which I felt assured she had endured about the sad results in years past. It was not until recently I saw in the papers that it was being contemplated to rear a monument to the memory of her husband, and that she knew nothing of the remains of her sons, that I determined to write to the Chicago Tribune and make public the information. I have never tried to conceal the fact, but have always talked freely in regard to the matter, and several years ago our local paper published an article in relation to the body being in my possession. I now freely and gladly, without price or reward, surrender the said body to John Brown, Jr., in order that it may be interred in free soil, and glad am I that I have been the means of thus preserving it for that purpose.

The body which is that of Watson Brown, will be interred in the family burying-ground, at North Elton, N. Y., by the side of the grave of old John Brown.—[Indianapolis Journal, September 12.]

Sau Francisco.

Somebody has poked fun at San Francisco by calling it "The Venice of the West," and then qualifying the compliment by explaining that the only resemblance between the two cities is in the volume and variety of the disagreeable smells that prevail in them. But the San Franciscans take no notice of this explanation. They accept the comparison in its broadest sense and positively expect you to see a resemblance between their very wonderful but very new and very ragged town and Venice! Indeed, there is no limit to the San Franciscan's expectations from a stranger. No excess of admiration ever becomes flattery. They will coolly accept every word you say, and even then will think you have not risen to the whole truth about "the Golden City," "the Queen of the Pacific," etc., etc., and perhaps go away after all with a lofty sort of commiseration for your rustic incapacity to grasp all at once the metropolitan splendors of San Francisco.

Now, I was sitting in the hotel one day and overheard a party of San Franciscans bragging in an off-hand way to a poor wretch who had been brought up in New Mexico or somewhere like it, and calmly assuring him that there was no place "in the world" of greater beauty than San Francisco and of more delicious fruits. They said a great deal more about the buildings, institutions, &c., &c., which was sheer nonsense, but let all that pass. I venture to attack them only at their strongest points. Hearing the conversation, and being inwardly exasperated at the imposition that was being put upon the simple-minded barbarian, I pretended to fall into the same easy credulity myself and drew them on to making such monstrous assertions as that San Francisco was a revelation of beauty to every tourist and the perfection of its fruit a never-ceasing delight to him. Having these grossly ignorant men thoroughly committed to what they had said, I ventured to inquire what standard of comparison they had for their self-laudation, what other countries they had visited and what fruits they considered California produced in such perfection. Now, it is a fact that these three impostors had never been out of America; in fact, that except for short visits on business to the Eastern States they had never been out of California and Nevada! I then proceeded to enlighten them—told them that to those who have traveled, to the cognoscenti, San Francisco does not appear at all beautiful; that on the contrary it is a great disappointment; that in America itself there are many places far more beautiful, while "in the world" there are scores of seaports with which San Francisco can no more venture to compare itself than a mud-pie can with a meringue. As for its fruits, there was not in its market now, in its best shops—and the height of the fruit season, too—a single thing that deserved to be called first-class. From the watery cherries to the woolly apricots, every fruit was as flavorless as it well could be, and as a whole they were so second rate that they could not find a sale in the best shops of either Paris or London.

This was very rude, I know, but I found to my surprise that every traveler in the room had been just as exasperated as myself by the local habit of exaggeration and several of them corroborated me. It is a great pity that San Franciscans should have this weakness. They have plenty to be proud of, for their city is a marvel. But it has all the disadvantages of newness, and in a greater degree, too, than any other new places, for instance Chicago or Denver. Its population, moreover, is more disagreeably unsettled than in any other town I know of except perhaps those on the Levant. All the mud and dirt are still in suspension, and a very undesirable mixture they make, too, those half-breed and hoodlum elements. I have no doubt, of course, that improvement is making immense and rapid strides, but to the visitor the act of transition is of course insupportable and he only sees the place at a period of repose between the last point of advance and the next. He can imagine anything he pleases. But this is not what he actually sees. For himself, then, I found San Francisco, as so many other travelers have described it, disorderly, breathless with haste, unkempt. Here and there, where trees have been planted and there is the grace of flowers and creeping plants, the streets look as if rational people might really live in them. But for the vast majority of the buildings they seem merely places to lodge in—dark bungalows or rest houses, perches for passing swallows—anything you like except houses to pass one's life in. They are not merely wooden, but they are sham too, with their imposing "fronts" nailed on to the roofs to make them look finer (just as vulgar women pin curly "bangs" on to the tops of their heads) and their inexcusable dearth of ornament.

In many ways the Queen of the Pacific was a surprise. I had expected to find it "semi-tropical." It is nothing of the kind. Women were wearing furs every afternoon in June, because of the chill wind that springs up about 3 o'clock, and men walked about with great coats over their arms ready for use. The architecture of the city is not so "semi-tropical" as that of suburban New York, with its vegetation, instead of being rampant, is conspicuously absent. Three women out of every four wore very thick veils, but why they were so thick I could not discover. In hot countries they do not wear them, nor in "semi-tropical." Perhaps they were vestiges of some recent visitation of dust, which appears to be sometimes as prodigious here as it is in Pietermaritzburg. But they might very properly have been made an armor against the flies which swarmed in some parts of the town in hideous multitudes.—[N. Y. Sun.]

German Peasant Women and American Invalids.

An American woman expresses her pain at seeing the German women carrying on their backs great baskets of earth, which men filled with their shovels; and at a Holland woman's pulling, by means of a strap across her breast, a canal boat in which two men sat smoking. She had also seen women and dogs harnessed together dragging a cart in which sat a man, laying his whip impartially over both woman and dog. "Being a woman," she says, "thank God I was born in America."

It certainly is one of the privileges of birthright here that women are not forced to toil, as the women do whom she describes. Yet in all probability, so far as health creates happiness, and happiness is almost impossible without health, the hardy peasant women of Holland and Germany might not have much occasion to envy their plying American sister. The chances are that the American woman has scarcely known life since she came of age a whole year of healthful hearty life; that she has some ache, some ail, some weakness, brought on by bad habits of living, imprudent diet or fashionable clothing; that her hips are loaded down with several pounds' weight of skirts; her waist loaded so tight that she can scarcely breathe; and the heels of her shoes are in the middle of her instep, and bound to produce, if they have already produced serious physical complications. The peasant woman's lot is a hard one, but she has a healthful appetite; and if she is likely by toil to become, it is quite as likely that her American sister will die, or live a protracted invalidism, in consequence of a too luxurious and fashionable existence.—[Detroit Free Press.]

It would be hard to find a more pitiable set of human beings anywhere than the female emigrants that arrive in this country from various parts of Europe. They are not only ignorant of the country, but usually without money and frequently without heart, and so in too many instances are the common prey of sharks and sharpers, who seek to use them in many evil ways. Castle Garden then is one of the dreariest places on this earth. Whatever, therefore, Mme. Elise de Roerber and Lady Jane Taylor or other ladies can do or conceive looking to any amelioration of the conditions of the female emigrant deserves the popular sympathy of man and womankind.—Philadelphia Times.

The Luck of a Broken Corset.

Miss Creiger snapped a corset steel at a picnic. Mr. Barnes heard it and begged to be allowed to make her a pair that would not break. She consented. Being a skillful mechanic, he invented and constructed an improved kind, and she was for three years supplied with them, at the end of which time they married. The question has been before the U. S. Supreme Court whether the wearing of the invention by Miss Creiger was such a "public usage" as to prevent the inventor "as will prevent Barnes from obtaining a patent. The court decided against Barnes, and Justice Miller dissented. "If the little spring," he says, "inserted in a single pair of corsets, and used by only one woman, covered by her outer clothing, and in a position withheld from public observation, is a public use of that piece of steel, I am at a loss to know the line between a public and a private use."—[New York Sun.]

An Omaha correspondent of the 19th instant gives the following, which will be of interest to the Christian world, and particularly the denomination mentioned. He says: Almost an entire Pullman car on the Union Pacific west bound train to-day was occupied by some American Presbyterian missionaries, some accompanied by their wives and families, who are en route to various points in Eastern and Southern Asia. Rev. D. McGilvary, Mrs. McGilvary and son are bound for Laos; Rev. E. P. Dunlap, Mrs. Dunlap and three children, on their return to the kingdom of Siam, where they have already spent several years; Rev. S. C. Peoples, J. P. Hurst and Mrs. Hurst, go to Laos; Rev. Mr. McLaren and Mrs. McLaren go to Siam; and Misses Wisard, Warner and Wirt go to Laos; Miss Linnell and Miss Griffin to the land of the white elephant; Miss Hesse and Miss Garvin go to Japan, and Rev. W. W. Hayes and Mrs. Hayes to China. The party sailed on the 28th from San Francisco.

CHURCH ATTRACTIONS.—Saratoga was recently well besprinkled with posters announcing that the Rev. Dr. Newman would preach the following Sunday in the First Methodist church, and that Gen. Grant would be present. As a result of this clever advertising the church was crowded to the doors; but people were divided as to whether the congregation was Dr. Newman's or Gen. Grant's. Appearances rather favor the latter belief, however, for when the preacher dismissed his hearers, not one of them showed the slightest inclination to leave. But as soon as the General walked down the aisle (after waiting five minutes, in hopes the crowd would disperse) they all made haste to follow him.

ALBINA HOMESTEAD

THE ALBINA HOMESTEAD, of which the above is a complete plan, is situated next to Albina, and between 41st and 42nd streets, on the east side of the Vancouver river. All the lots in blocks 26, 27, 28, 29 and 30 are 30x130 feet, with twenty-foot alleys through the blocks. All the other lots are 60x130 feet. The streets are wide, and have all been cleared, while the lots are high and level and can be very easily cleared. We now offer for sale for a short time a limited number of these lots and blocks at reasonable prices and on easy terms.

THE ALBINA HOMESTEAD is unquestionably the best field for investment and the most desirable place for location in the market. Its close proximity to the cities of Portland and West-Portland, and to the heavy improvements now being carried out by the various companies under the direction of J. V. Lusk—the Yale Elevators, Machine Shops and other works of these companies—its nearness also to the Albina Ferry, together with the proposed street railway from 1st Street Ferry to East-Portland, will make this property very accessible from all parts of these cities. These advantages will necessarily attract a large population, and in the meantime make this the most popular and valuable suburban property in the vicinity, while in the near future it must furnish homes for the rapidly increasing population of Albina, and thus its value will be at least five times what we now offer it for. We will show the property and give full information to all who may apply to us personally, and inquiries addressed to us by mail will receive prompt attention. H. H.
