The question of building the Salem & Waldo Hills railroad is again being agitated, with a pretty fair prospect of something being soon done.

Amanda Welch, living at Garfield, aged 23 years, is 32 inches high and weighs only 31 pounds. Strangest of all, she was born in Oregon.

Some residents of Upper Molalla caught a large bear in a trap last Sunday morning and had a good deal of fun in dispatching his brainship.

A girl in Yamhill county, 13 years old, has just been married. Very few girls can be induced to cut off their oysters and ice cream that soon.

When the new O. R. & N. Co.'s time table goes into effect, Pullman palace sleeping cars will be run between Walla Walla and Portland only.

On a patch of ground in the lower end of Crooked Creek valley, one and one-fourth acres in extent, there were raised the past season 23,000 pounds of potatoes.

Last Saturday, says the Albany Herald, some dogs, probably two, attacked a band of 32 sheep belonging to Jesse McGhee, a few miles from this city, and succeeded in killing 6 outright and wounding 13, part of which will probably die.

Ashland is again in sore travail over the saloon question. The average Ashlandite don't just know whether a liquor saloon is a desirable acquisition or not, and judging from the tone of the Tidings, many of them are disposed to try the saloons and see how they work.

An Elopement.

Says the Roseburg Plaindealer: Wednesday morning last Mr. Johnny Moore left his home and took the northern bound train for Portland, accompanied by Miss Lucinda Singleton, his wife's sister, under such peculiar circumstances that everybody imagined they had skipped the country, and after developments has demonstrated the correctness of that theory. The facts in the matter as near as we can ascertain them are about as follows: For some time Mrs. Moore has noticed an undue familiarity between the two parties and remonstrated with them upon the subject, and received the assurance of amends. Some time since Mr. Singleton, Moore's father-in-law, went his security for about five hundred dollars in order that the latter might go into business. The money was to purchase stock—harness, saddlers' goods, etc.

Moore sold out these goods a few days before he left for the cash, which he took with him also the old man's daughter. For several days past he had been very attentive to his wife, and she thought a bright future was opening before her. Wednesday morning Moore got up very early and went out without any explanation, leaving his wife in bed. She thinking nothing strange of his not returning let the matter pass until rather late in the day when she found her sister had flown also. Then her cup of anguish was more than full. She ascertained they had taken the train for Portland, and knew her worst fears were more than realized. They were arrested at Portland upon an order from Sheriff Purdon, but as there was no complaint filed against them he afterwards ordered them released. Moore is a small, smooth faced man, about twenty-seven years old, lame in one leg, and a saddler by trade. The young lady is about seventeen years of age, fair complexion, strongly built, and rather good looking. At this writing there is no effort being made to stop them.

Rather a Slow Train.

"Conductor," said the gray-haired man who had been craning his neck out of the window to learn the cause of delay, "what's the matter?"

"We're on a side track waiting for the freight," replied the conductor.

"Are we tied to a tree?" demanded the gray-haired man.

"Certainly not," replied the conductor.

"Not hitched to anything!" exclaimed the passenger rising in dismay and making for the door.

"What do you want to be hitched up for?" inquired the conductor, somewhat disturbed by the gray-haired man's actions.

"Nothing, nothing; only suppose that freight train should strike us and drive us back a foot. Oh, you may play it on the rest, but you can't catch me for a sleeping car berth while you make up the lost distance! I went over this road when I was a boy, and now I'm on my way home. Give it to strangers, but don't try on life-long travelers."

Prineville News: On last Sunday morning the children of Chas. Hoyt, who lives at Cow canyon, left the house to play on the surrounding hills, and did not return until noon. One of the children not returning, immediate search was made, but the missing one could not be found until the next morning, when it was found about half a mile from home, having perished during the cold storm of the night.

Independent: On the stage from Lakeview on Sunday morning there was a passenger who stated that he was crazy, and from his appearance and actions we should judge he told the truth. The driver told us that he had voluntarily boarded the stage and announced his intention of going to Stockton for treatment. He was not in the custody of an officer, but seemed determined to go alone to the asylum.

The Coos Bay News says that Geo. Chard has 200 cedar logs in North Slough ready to raft, and 200 more cut in the woods ready to be hauled and put in the boom. The 400 are said to be worth about $4,000.
