The following are the facts developed in the Melherron murder, a portion of which are gleamed from the East Oregenian: Sunday morning the body of a man who was in town only a few days before, was discovered two and a half miles from Pendleton, in the Umatilla river, with a rope around his neck, by an Indian named Kioallee. The name of the man was Charles Mulherron, a trapper and hunter by profession, about 5 feet 8 or 9 inches high. He was last seen alive Friday evening on the reservation, in the vicinity of Old Queen's domicile. When he left town he had in his possession a bag of silver and quite a sum in greenbacks and gold. In his pockets were discovered $250 in greenbacks and $30 in gold, but the silver is missing and can not be found. A hole seemingly made by a pick-axe was through his head. The face and head was mutilated considerable. The crime, some think, was done by offended Indians, as the murdered man offered money and insults to the squaws. He also had with him, it is rumored, two bottles of whicky which he gave to the bucks and sent off rejoicing, but who returned before he left their wigwams to find him making love to their women, and it is supposed they became enraged, lassoed the man, humg him and dragged him to the river in which they wished to hide their crime. There is no doubt that it was murder deliberate and atrocious, Bay are in an almost impassible conwhether perpetrated by Indians or not dition. is all surmise, but it is not certain that the crime was committed for money, as most of the man's wealth was found on his body. He had come from Idaho over the mountains, riding a cayuse and driving a pack horse. On several oc asions after arriving in Pendleton where he put up at a hotel, he was seen riding toward the reservation, the last time on Friday, the 24th. The squaw testified that she heard a loud quarrel going on near her hut, but thought nothing of it, as quarrels were of frequent occurrence in her neighborhood. An extra effort will be made to dis cover the murderer, as too many have heen slain on the reservation for which mo one has been brought to justice,

A Pennsylvania Court has rendered a decision that is based upon common sense and common honesty. A wealthy widower paid assiduous court to a fair damsel, and it became understood that they were to be married. But the sly old fox, three or four days, before he formally engaged himself to his lady love, transferred all his property to his trustees, to be held for him during his life and to be conveyed after his death to his children by his first wife. The unsuspecting victim married the old fellow, and he died not very long after; but when the secret deed was brought to light the bereaved woman went into Court and was allowed her dower, the decision of the court being that "the instrument was a fraud upon her just expectations." The brighter lights of the Strakosch Opera Troupe gathered round them a few friends on Saturday evening for a quiet little supper. The talk turned on Max Strakosch's new baby.

"He's gct a tooth," said a gentleman sitting at one end of the table.

"Max is very proud of his baby," said Miss Kellogg, who was sitting at the other end.

"Yes," said the gentleman, still carrying out the train of his own thought, 'and he's got two more coming.

Miss Kellogg shrieked and dropped her napkin and her knife and fork, while the gentleman still further 'en livened matters by insisting that his reference was solely to the teeth.

Governor-elect Pattison of Pennsylvania is made of the right kind of stuff and is not the man to ape royalty.
