For Young Men.

That clothes don't make the man, That their fathers know more than they know.

That if once they get into debt they may never get out.

That they will need something more substantial than eigars, tight kids, and a comb to start house-keeping.

That a girl who decks herself in the latest thing out and parades the street while her mother does the family washing, isn't worth wasting much love on

That they can't reckon on their father's fortune alone to bring then through life. Fortunes are slippery things-better have something besides to fall back on.

That if they wish to fall in love with a girl because she is pretty, they ought to be sure how much powder and paint there may be in the question, and figure it up accordingly.

That a fellow that deliberately proposes matrimony to a young lady when he can't support himself is either a first-class fraud or a fool-unless he marries for money and becomes her hired man.

A Woman's Idea of Economy.

"How much do you pay a load for tirewood?" asked one Austin lady of another, who was much given to bragging about her economy in housekeeping.

"I only pay four and a half," was the reply. "How do you manage to get it half a dollar cheaper than anybody else?"

"I hire a back and go out on the road, and meet the wood wagons before they get to town."
