Notice.

The ladies of Eugene met Feb. 15, 1883, and with the aid of Mrs Clawson organized a Womans Christian Temperance Union. The following officers were chosen: Mrs. J. H. McClung, To Ellen Murray and Peter J. Wolf, two of President; Mrs. T. Condon, Vice President; Mrs. C. Lambert and Miss Nettie McCornack, Secretaries, and Mrs N. H. Geary, Treasurer,

We would not be understood to be antagonistic to other organizations already in operation. So far as they are successful in promoting the cause of temperance, we bid them "God speed." In the language of another, "we expect to do whatever we can find to do." Looking to him who has promised wisdom to those who ask, we would labor for the tempted and fallen,

"We know "He is able to save to the uttermost." We look forward to the expected visit of the President of the National Woman's Christian Text. perance Union, Miss Frances W llard, with earnest expectation, and desire

Does It Pay?

The great Scotch poet, Robert Burns, was one of these brilliant and genial men, who so often become the slaves of strong drink. In an old volume of his poetry, there appears the following letter, written after an evening party, in which the poet had disgraced bimself. The horrors of remorse, which assail the poor drinker after a debauch, and which drive him to drown his terrors in more drink, or to the suicide's bullet, could not be more graphically described: To MADAM: I dare say this his the first epistle you have ever recoived from this nether world, swrite you from the regions of Hell, samid the horrors of the damned. The time and manner of leaving your earth I don't exactly know, as I took my departure in the heat of a fever of intoxication, contracted at your hospita ble mansion; but on my arrival here I was sentenced to endure the purgator ial torments of this infernal confine and all on account of the impropriety of amy conduct yester night under your roof. Here I am laid on a bed of pitiring on a pillow of ever-piercing thorn, while an infernal tormentor, wrinkled and old, and cruel; his name, I think, Recollection, with a whip of scorpious, forbids peace or rest to approach me, and keeps anguish eternally awake. Still, Madam, if I could in any meas ure be reinstated in the good opinion of the fair circle whom my conduct clast night so much injured. I think it would be an alleviation of my terments. For this reason I trouble you with this letter. To the men of the company I will make no appology. Your husband, who insisted on my drinking more than I chose, has no right to blame me; and the other gentlemen were partakers of my guilt. But to you, Madam, I have much to apologize. Your good opinion I value as one of the greatest acquisitions I had on earth, and I was truly a beast to forfeit it. There was Miss I ____, too, a wo nan of fine sense, gentle and unassuming manners -do make on my part, a miserable wretch's best apologies to her. 'To all the ladies please present my humble contrition for my conduct, and my petition for their gracious pardon. O all ye powers of decency and decorum! whisper to them that my errors, though great, were involuntary-that an involuntary-that an intoxicated man is the vilest of beast-that it was not in my nature to be brucal to any one -that to be rude to a woman when in my senses was impossible with me-but * * * Regret! Remorse!

Shane! Ye three hell-hound that ever dog my steps and bay at my heels, spare me! spare me!

Forgive the offences and pity the perdition of, Madam, your humble slave, ROBERT BURNS.
