Foiling the Old Folks.

An interesting elopement, not in point of romantic novelty, but for the obstacles that were woven around the primrose path of the youthful lovers, came to light husband erred. Anita, however, was promised by her father to a man she did night during the heavy thunder storm, a not love; but she was not married as had light buggy, drawn by a speedy bay horse, drew up in front of the Farmers' Home. A rustic lad, with a shrowd, determined look, alighted. Throwing a silver dollar to the porter that stepped up to take his baggage, he ordered lodging for his horse, with strict injunctions to scrape him well and have everything in trim for the next morning. It was plain from the froth that covered him that he had done some good traveling. The her, as I pressed convulsively her pulse young man then registered in the office the first through ticket to Portland over as Josep Shield of Fairfield, and, ordering a light supper, retired, but before locking his room for the night, called for a long rope that would be found in his buggy, giving as his excuse for this strange action that he was morbidly afraid of fires in large hotels. He was given a room in the rear of the building. Just before daybreak another buggy with a frothing horse checked up before the hotel. Two ferocions looking fellows stumped into the hotel, and, seizing the register, ordered to be shown to that "scoundrel's room," pointing to Mr. Sbield's name on the book. They refused to give any reason for such a demand, except that they wanted that fellow and mus have him. One held a buggy whip threateningly in his hand, while the other made some secret inquiries as to the person who accompanied the young man, and whether any girl had been seen with him. As the proprietor held out persistently in refusing to allow them to seize the young man unless they were on the bank, exclaiming as he was swept vested with such authority, they let out to his doom, "Forget-me-not!" the secret of their visit. They hung around the house till it was bright day light. About six o'clock a man was sent up to the room of young Shield to awake him as ordered. When the door was opened, it was found that the bird had already flown. The window was raised and a rope that swung from the casement of the window explained the mystery. The two strangers soon afterward made a second visit to the hotel, and were much enraged by the way they had been foiled by their supposed prey. Later in the morning a messenger called with a note, asking that the horse and buggy be sent as secretly as possible to Wenzel and Market streets, where the owner would meet it. Soon after the happy Lizzie Robinson, alias Raiston, said to couple were speeding on their way to be a niece of Ralston, of California, was Jeffersonville, where they ware united picked up by the police of Chicago re as Miss Annie Meyers and Joseph Shield of Fairfield. When the two strangers Lawrence McCullug, associate justice learned the successful way in which they of the supreme court of the Hawaiian had been beaten, they gave up the chase and told the whole story. The bride is battling with the rough water. He dis-a beautiful country girl about seventeen appeared and reappeared, to disappear years of age, and daughter of a wealthy farmer near Fairfield. The young man secured his father's best horse and buggy, stole his bride from the house, and, getting a fair start, was fully an hour on the road before the elopement was discovered. faith with any other man, "If there was guilt," exclaimed Garibaldi, "it was all mine. If an innocent person has suffered, I only have to have to answer for it, and I have answered. She is dead and her father is avenged. There, at the month of the Eridano, day on which I hoped to fight death for to count its last throbs, as I received upon my lips her parting sigh and held a corpse in my arms-on that day I recognized the greatness of my fault."

Stories of Flowers.

The "soft cerulean hue" of the Mouseear Scorpion Grass would never have won postic recognition if some one had not christened it forget-me-not. Who stood godfather history has not recorded, but tradition has it that a knight and his lady love were interchanging sweet nothings on the banks of the Danube, when the fair one caught sight of some flowers on the other side of the river, so brightly blue, that she coveted their posses sion. A hint sufficed to send her lover plunging into the stream. He secured the flowers easily enough, but swimming back with them proved a more difficult matter. The current was too strong for bim, and as it bore him past his despairing mistress, he flung the fatal flowers

And the lady fair of the knight so true.

The story of the origin of the forgetme-not's sentimental designation may have been in the mind of the Princess Marie of Baden that winter day, when, strolling along the banks of the Rhine with her cousin, Louis Napoleon, she inveighed against the degeneracy of modern gallants, vowing they were incapable of emulating the devotion to beauty that characterized the cavaliers of olden times. As they lingered on the causeway dykes, where the Neckar joins the Rhine, a sudden gust of wind carried away a flower from the hair of the princess and cast it into the rushing waters. "There!" she exclaimed, "that would be an opportunity for a cavalier of the old days to show his devotion."

"That's a challenge, cousin," retorted Louis Napoleon, and in a second he was and reappear again and again, but at length reached the shore safe and sound, with his cousin's flower in his hand. "Take it, Marie," he said, as he shook himself, "but never again talk to me of the Year Round.

SCIENTIFIC SCRAPS.

French silk merchants talk of acelimatizing a spider from the African coast, which makes a thread very much like yellow silk and almost as strong. Hypozzotic acid is a new French explosive, which, instead of replacing various atomic portions of cellulose, as in gun-cotton, or the alcohols, as in nitroglycerine, by nitrogen, does this in compounds of petroleum. The result is a vastly more powerful explosive.

According to the "Repertoire de Pharmacie," olive husks are used on a very large scale in the adulteration of pepper. The microscopic aspect of their cell structure is so nearly like that of pepper busks that the difference is only perceived with, difficulty. Hence the clive husks, formerly used for manure or fuel, are now worth fifty dollars a ton.

In Breslau, a chimney shaft fifty feet high is composed entirely of paper pulp. which has been chemically impregnated so as to resist combustion. Paper has been put to some extraordinary uses, but this is perhaps the most astonishing violation of preconceived ideas yet attempted. The next thing in order now will be gun-cotton erucibles.

It has lately been proved that under certain conditions yeast may be a powerful poison. If introduced in suspension into the circulation of living animals to the extent of more than two grammes, it always produces fatal results, in smaller dozes it induces coma. This is due to the fact that it multiplies in the blood, depriving the red corpuseles of their oxygen and reducing their color to a dark brown.

Some samples of cheap coffee analyzed by the directors of the Paris Municipal Laboratory were found to contain the following substances: Bread dust, ground acorns, red earth, vermicelli, plumbago, flour, caromel, sand brick dust, ashes, ground peas and beans, carrots, figs, beet-root, saw-dust, red ochre and mahogany shavings. Some more expensive specimens differed from this only in having chicory added to this appetizing mixture.

Sufferers from certain common forms of indigestion forget the effects of loading the stomach with cold liquids. "Cold drinks are often depressing," says the Lancet, "and the peculiar form of indigestion just now very prevalent, in which food retained an unreasonable time in the stomach, is in a large proportion of instances the direct effect of persistent chilling of the gastrie organ by copious draughts of cold drink.'

Dr. Scheesingham recently wrote to Karl Blaid as follows: "Proofs in point of fact of your views as to the kinship between Trojans and Thrakians, which later were interpreted as belonging to the eastern Teutonic race, I have found near and in the tumulus of Proterilaos. in the Thrakian Ghersonese; for the gar dens all around, and the tumulus itself. are strewn with fragments of that wonderful pottery which only occurs in the first and oldest settlement of Troy, and nowhere else."

How Garibaldi Woord Anita.

The loss of so many dear companions specially Carniglia and Mutuu, weighed him down with a profound sadness. Ho felt alono upon the earth, and was con-scious of an immense wold in his heart; life seemed insupportable. It was then that, for the first time, the idea of matrimony flashed across Garibaldi's mind. Up to that date the conjugal state seemed so ill adapted to his wandering and adventurous life that he had regarded it as an impossible event. But after the shipwreck the current of his thoughts changed. He felt the need of supplying in some way the lost friends; to find a parents had died when she was little faithful and loving soul to share with him the battles of life, to render less hard the solitude of his exile. He had watched over her with jealous care, al-Rossetti, it is true, whom he loved like a ways keeping her at school, however, brother; but the duties of his office obliged Rosaetti to live at a distance, and rare were the occasions when he could see him. Beside, the friendship of a man, however strong, did not any longer satisfy him; it was a woman a neart that he needed, a woman entirely and indis-solubly his; so when he found the right solubly her. One evening he stood "'And believe me,' said Miss Helen, "'And believe me,' said Miss Helen, looking upon the shore, when he saw on a mole a group of women and girls. At first their forms passed unnoticed before him, but by degrees his eye, and perhaps his heart, fixed upon one, and he stopped to contemplate her. She was a young woman in the bloom of health and strength, gifted with a sort of irregular masculine beauty. She was the ideal woman that Garibaldi was in search of. Before he had spoken to her or heard her spaak, by some invisible and magic spark which kindles love, the Mizgardo loved her. She also had remarked the blonde, leonine head of the foreign sailor who watched her day after day. She felt the fascination of that glance, the touch of the magic spark, and secretly gave her heart to him who offered his. One evening Garibaldi resolved to delay no longer, and went to the girl's home. His heart beat violently, but held a firm resolution. At the door he met a man who, perhaps knowing some thing of the gallant Italian, or in obedience to the custom of the country, invited him to take a cup of coffee. Garibaldi said he would have entered without an invitation, but it rendered his design more easy. He took an opportunity of whispering to the object of his devotion, "Maiden, will you be mine?" to which she replied only by a look, which gave the promise of unutterable love. Some evenings after he returned and carried her off, put her on board the safe refuge wife. They were legally married at county.
