J. A. Maxwell, who has been buying sheep in the Umpqua valley for some time past, left last week with about 1000 head, bound for Honey Lake valley, California. He will be on the road about four months.
Grant County News: The increase in the number of sheep in the northwestern part of this county is very marked. There are now estimated to be 100,000 head in the Long, Creek, North Fork and Haystack country—fully twice as many as there were at this time last year. Sheep are generally taking the place of other varieties of live stock, and nearly every farmer now has a band.

On the War Path.

Farmer Jones bought a revolver. The way it happened was thus: There has been a male cat with a big voice serenading the neighborhood for the past week, making it impossible to sleep, and equally impraisible to stay awake without becoming a raving maniac, and if Jones had said it once he had said a thousand times: "I'll shoot that cat," till finally Mrs. Jones reminded him that the bootjack was the only shooting iron he possessed, and that had been fired long ago. So he went down town and bought a revolver at Bales' second-hand store.
Now what Jones knows about revolvers is even less than the editor of the GUARD knows about the sheep business, but when he came home to supper he called the family into the hall and took the revolver out of his overcoat pocket, and was about to hand it to Mrs. Jones for inspection, when the whole family shrieked in chorus:
"Is it loaded?"
"No," said Jones, "never has been loaded."
"Fly for your lives, children!" cried Mrs. Jones, and they rushed up stairs and locked themselves in.
"Well, if ever I saw such idiots!" remarked Jones, looking down the muzzle of the pistol to see if it needed cleaning. It came near being the last remark he ever made on any subject. A bullet lodged in the ceiling as he spoke, and, but for the screams, that assailed him up stairs, Jones would have been certain that he had murdered the whole family. As soon as they learned that the pistol was really loaded, they all came down, snifling and cheerful. No one had ever heard of a loaded pistol doing any damage.
That night they prepared to slay the cat. Willie and Johnnie were allowed to sit up to see the fun, and they stood valiantly behind their fathers, who framed himself in the window and waited. It was bright moonlight; Mrs. Jones sat with her head under the bed clothes and said, "call me when it's all over," and they waited for the feline to take up the line of march along the back yard fence. It seemed a cruel thing to deliberately set out to murder a cat in cold blood, but, like Macbeth, it had murdered sleep and made itself disliked in that community. It came from across the barn; it had struck the first note of its usual serenade, with the vigor and force a love-sick cat is fabled for, when bang—blaze—boom—shrieks—in a grand conglomeration of sounds rent the air—the cat was safe on the wooldshed of the next house, the ball grazed the elbow of a policeman two blocks away, passed through the hat of Bill Stahl, an unoffending citizen, and buried itself in the sidewalk. The rest of the pistol has not yet been found. The cat still lives.

Sentenced in Jargon.
The four Indians convicted of manslaughter in the U. S. circuit court for the killing of Mulherrin in Umatilla county, were brought into that court yesterday morning to receive sentence. The court in passing sentence recounted the circumstances of the killing as adduced by the evidence, by which it was shown that the victim had been the aggressor; but, inasmuch as the killing was unprovoked and atrocious and brutal, the judge felt called upon to impose a sentence of proportional severity. Each of the dusky savages were sentenced to serve a term of ten years in the State penitentiary. Judge Deady, who, it seems, like many other old Oregonians, is thoroughly familiar with the Chinook jargon, communicated his sentence to the brutal savages in a language they could thoroughly comprehend, but they took it all with that sullen silence peculiar to savage barbarians such as they.—Standard.

Liquor sellers in Maine are put to strange devices in order to conceal their contraband wares. On a recent police raid in that State, in one house the bottles were found in the well, tightly corked and with strings around their necks for convenience in raising. In another the bottles were under the cooking range in the ashpit. One liquor seller, a woman, had two fat bottles hooked to a belt which she wore under her over-skirt, and another dealer concealed his under a trap-door beneath a pile of hay in a cock loft.

Chinese Leprosy.
Another leper was found upon Front street yesterday morning by Policeman Collins. Whence he came, or how long he has been in the city could not be learned. The victim of the dread scourge was a middle-aged Chinaman, whose face was blistered with large thick excrescences, giving the skin a semblance to the hide of a crocodile. He was taken to the city jail, and after being examined by Dr. Watkins, sent to the poor farm, where there are five others afflicted with the same disease. They are kept strictly to themselves, their food being carried to them on trays used for no other purpose. Great fear is manifested on the part of many to approach a leper, but medical authorities now unite in saying there can be no danger of the disease except through inoculation.—Oregonian.

This country's hospitality is practically boundless. It welcomes heartily all those who are able and willing to work, but it has no welcome for those who come here to sit up in the business of begging or of becoming a charge upon those who do work. This country has exceedingly few paupers of its own, and does not desire to become the almshouse of the world, and our government should be prompt and emphatic in notifying the world that she cannot allow this system to be continued.
