Hanged and Didn't Know It.

[N. Y. Star.]

The dismal rain beat down against the windows of the Court House, and swept in sheets across the jail yard. Court was adjourned for the day, the clerks had gone home, and a band of officials had gathered in the juryroom for a half-hour chat. But the flow of conversation was less free and jovial than usual. Apparently the depressing aspect of things outside had affected the spirits of the county magnates.

The usually smiling face of the Sheriff wore a sad expression, and the jolly Surrogate gazed mournfully out upon the cheerless, muddy street. Upon the benign visage of the County Judge was a melancholy look, as if in his official capacity he had sentenced himself as a private individual to suffer the extreme penalty of the law. Tilted back in a big arm chair, the foreman of the Grand Jury thoughtfully cleaned his finger nails. A long silence was broken by the Sheriff, who observed, as a sudden gust of wind dashed the rain noisily against the glass:

"What a day for hanging!"

"Wretched!" replied the Surrogate, carelessly turning the leaves of the Penal Code.

"I wouldn't be hanged on a day like this for any consideration."

"A fellow would catch his death of cold," put in the foreman of the Grand Jury. "What put the subject of hanging into your head, Sheriff?"

"Oh, I was just thinking of a poor fellow who executed a murder in Iowa ten years ago, on just such a day as this."

"Another of your Western yarns, eh, Sheriff?" said the Surrogate, with a yawn. "Why will a man always draw a long bow when he tells what happened to him out West?"

"This is Gospel truth," retorted the Sheriff quickly, "and it's nothing that happened to me, or I should not be here to tell it. Moreover, Mr. Surrogate, I never exaggerate."

"Oh, no," was the sarcastic rejoinder.

"Never mind him, said the foreman of the Grand Jury; go on with your story."

The Sheriff seated himself on the green-covered table and began:

"Well, as I said, this happened ten years ago, way out in Iowa. A fellow killed his brother-in-law and was sentenced to death. The hanging was public, the gallows being erected on the open prairie a little distance behind the jail. I was sworn in as a special deputy. Holy Moses, how it did rain on that day! The water came down in chunks with sufficient force to tear umbrellas to tatters in fifteen minutes."

"Sheriff, Sheriff!" murmured the County Judge, in a tone of gentle reproach.

"Oh, it's a fact! The condemned man was carried to the place of execution in an open cart. Another deputy and I rode with him. A hanging was too rare a treat to be missed by people out there, no matter what the weather was. Shivering and wet, a large crowd stood in the course, saturated grass under the scaffold. We placed the man under the crosspiece and fastened the rope about his neck. Everything was ready except the last prayer and letting the trap fall. The Sheriff asked the prisoner if he had anything to say."

"Yes," said the man. He made a long speech, declaring his innocence, abusing the Judge and all that kind of thing. Suddenly he stopped in the middle of a sentence. All this time you must remember the rain was falling in cataclysm. Seeing the doomed man silent, the Sheriff tipped a wink to the clergyman, who, being a Baptist, did not mind the rain. The reverend gentleman began to pray. We all bent our heads, although no one was pious enough to take his hat off. Just as Brother Hardshell was winding up his petition we heard a cry of astonishment from the crowd. I looked up and what do you think I saw?"

"The prisoner escaping!" asked the Surrogate.

"No, sir; he was hanging two feet from the platform."

"What?" cried the Sheriff's auditors, together.

"The rain had shrunk the rope enough to hang our man for us."

For a moment the silence of the room was broken only by the ticking of the clock and the rattle of the raindrops against the panes. The foreman of the Grand Jury drew a long breath and said:

"Sheriff, a man of your intelligence should give unqualified testimonials for patent medicines."
