TUTT'S PILLS
 TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.
 From these scourges arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Erection of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Distress, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine, TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA, Sold everywhere, 25c. Office, 44 Murray St., N. Y.

The famous packet liner, Great Western, now sailing between San Francisco and other Pacific ports, is already twice as old as ships usually get to be. She first sailed from New York to Liverpool forty years ago, and remained in the Atlantic fleet twenty-nine years; crossed the Atlantic 116 times, brought 30,000 passengers to New York, has had 1,500 births, and 200 marriages on board, and in all her experience never lost one of her crew or so much as a spar in a gale of wind.

The Poet of the Sierras.

Cincinnatus Hiner Miller, better known as Joaquin Miller, was born in Wabash district of Indiana November 10, 1841.
 At thirteen years of age, he removed with his parents to Oregon. He then attempted mining, and lived an adventurous life in California. He served with Walker in Nicaragua, and afterwards lived among the Indians. In 1860 he began to study law, and upon the breaking out of the war, published a Democratic paper at Eugene City, Oregon, in which his expressions of opinions were of so rank a character that the authorities saw fit to suppress it for disloyalty. A strong individuality marked the man at this time as possessing more than ordinary ability in certain directions, and a few published efforts, written in strongly imaginative style, won for him the name: "Poet of the Sierras." In 1863 his attention was attracted by a series of graceful verses in the papers, which bore the signature of "Minnie Myrtle," whose real name was Miss Minnie Theresa Dyer. He determined to meet her, and after a three days acquaintance, they were married. Domestic troubles soon became the order of the day and in 1870 they were divorced.

From 1866 to 1870 he was County Judge of Grant county.

He went to England in 1871, and published a volume of poems called "Songs of the Sierras," a portion of which had already been published under the same name in the United States.

His efforts met with better success in England than they had done in America, and from that time forward his publications met with a ready sale. He is a most eccentric man, and for many years his long hair, red shirt, unpolished boots and tramplike appearance were a source of much comment. After his divorce from his Pacific coast family he married into the Leland family, of hotel fame. It is claimed that the fortune he had accumulated from the successful sale of his books was lost on Wall Street, and the fact that to-day he works long and well at ordinary newspaper work, for moderate pay, leads to a belief in the report. He works as cleverly as ever, both in rhyme and prose, and his hair and clothing have been toned down until to-day he walks Broadway unnoticed, save by those who know him.

Despite his eccentricity, he is a congenial and entertaining person, of fine mind, worthy of even a wider recognition than than he has received. Occasional columns in the New York papers from his pen, where prose and rhyme are intermingled, bear witness to the good sense and judgment which he unites to a lofty and picturesque imagination.—S. E. Post.

A Drummer's Sympathy for a Roast Duck.

"What have you got for dinner?" inquired a disgusted drummer of a waiter. The drummer had been in the town twenty-four hours without taking an order.
 "Roast duck, sir."
 "Ah! was the duck shot on the wing?"
 "I guess so."
 "Trying to get away from this cursed place, wasn't he?"
 "I presume likely enough, sir."
 "Good bird; sagacious fowl; rara avis. I admire his pluck and pity his misfortune. You may bring me that duck. I'll take the whole of him. I'll help him along on the road."—S. F. Ex.

Several ladies were chatting on the veranda of a seaside hotel, when one of the fair complacently observed: "I never bathe without discovering some new beauty." Severe silence greeted the remark, but one rival cuttingly asked: "How often do you bathe—once a year?" And these were fashionable ladies.

The First Judge Lynch.

[R. J. Burdett in Philadelphia Times.]
 It is said by some veracious authorities, whose names I have forgotten because I never knew them, that on the ancient council books of Galway, Ireland, it is duly recorded that in the year of our Lord 1493, "James Lynch, Mayor of Galway, hanged his own son out of the window for defrauding and killing strangers without marshal or common law, to show a good example to posterity."

It seems, from the chronicle, that young Lynch had been sent to Spain by his father, the Mayor, to purchase a cargo of wine that biteth like logwood and stingeth like an adder when it giveth its dye color aright in the cup. But the young man wasted his substance in riotous living, and fared sumptuously three times a day and four or five times a night, and spent all his money at the bar, and in the faro room, before he bought his cargo. However, his rating was good, and he loaded his ship on a short credit—thirty, sixty and ninety days, fifteen off—and sailed joyously for home, intending to beat the slate and say nothing to his father about the paper. But the credit man of the concern did not exactly like the looks of things, and sent his nephew along to collect the money in Galway. Seeing that the nephew's presence would probably cause a coolness in the family circle as soon as he presented his statement, young Lynch expedited matters by tossing the Spaniard into the loud sounding sea, and then sailed joyfully on in an ever widening moral horizon, and intellectual sky that was infinitely cloudless.

But one of the sailors sometime afterward lay down to die, and when he was positively assured that he could not live long enough to be hanged for his share in the transaction, told Mayor Lynch how his son had killed the Spaniard. Tried before his own father, he was convicted and sentenced to be hanged. The family and friends violently prevented the execution, whereupon the Mayor took his son upstairs, fastened a staple to the wall, with his own hands fastened the noose about the young man's neck, pushed him out of a window overlooking a public street and there hanged him in a manner and for reasons set forth in the record. Whenever you talk about Lynch law, think of John Fitzstephens Lynch, Mayor of Galway, who filed the first caveat for an invention generally supposed to be American.

A Trifling Difference.

A Jersey man called on a New York lawyer the other day and announced that "his rich brother had drawn up a will and died, and that—"

"Ah! I see," interrupted the attorney, "and you want me to bust it. Very well, sir; we'll plead insanity."

"Oh, no—he wasn't insane. You see the will leaves everything to—"

"To his second wife, or some church or college. Have no fears, my dear sir, I can bust the business sky-high. We'll plead undue influence."

"But I influenced him myself!"
 "Ah, that alters the case somewhat, but I'll prove to the jury that he was afflicted with softening of the brain."

"For heaven's sake don't do it!"
 "But I must and shall break the will."

"Then I will have to find a lawyer who can't, for it's drawn in my favor, and I want to beat all the other heirs."

"Ah! certainly, that alters the case. Your brother was sane, sensible and in perfect health, and all the lawyers this side of Halifax can't break the will! Sit down, sir."
