Lum Rhea, of Rhea Creek, recently got up a three year old horse to break to work. In handling the animal it was discovered that a slight lump existed on one of the shoulders. This was cut open and a ten cent piece was found under the skin. The brand on the horse was rather dim, and the supposition is that some one who was anxious to increase his band of horses inserted the dime in order to identify and prove his claim to the property in the future. The borse had never been worked or handled, so there was no necessity for silver as a sweeny cure. -Heppner Gazette.
