

The Elections.

Returns from the State elections in the East are as yet incomplete, but enough is known to warrant the assertion that New York, New Jersey, Maryland and Virginia have gone Democratic, while Massachusetts, Connecticut and Pennsylvania are Republican by greatly reduced majorities.

The greatest interest has centered upon New York, Massachusetts and Virginia. In New York, the Democrats were divided on local candidates, as well as local questions, all over the State, and more especially in the great Democratic strongholds of New York City and Rochester. The registration was light, the Republicans unanimous and enthusiastic for their ticket, and alive to their peril, New York's Federal office holders, who draw in salaries $5,000,000 per year, contributed liberally in their party's need; nor was it forgotten by Vanderbilt and Gould. All the statements above except the last, were telegraphed all over the county as coming from the Republican Central Committee of that State, and therefore must be true. After doing their best to give the State away the Democrats carry the State by 15,000. The dissension gives the Republicans the Legislature and one State officer. Massachusetts, a State that gave Garfield 60,000 majority defeats Ben Butler by only 10,000, in the largest number ever cast. The Readjusters have been adjusted in Virginia, not altogether to their liking, as the Virginians have repudiated them; 30,000 is the Democratic majority that gives assurance that Virginia will vote for a Democrat for President next year. New Jersey, claimed by the Republicans, increases the Democratic majority over that of last year. Maryland gives 12,000 majority the right way. The results have been of a highly gratifying nature and presage victory to the Democracy next year. Oregon will follow the same way in June.

Obituary Notice.

Prof Emory E Burke was born in Multnomah county, Oregon, February 26, 1836, and died of congestion of the bowels in Eugene City, October 30, 1883. In infancy he lost his mother who was drowned. His father lived till he attained his sixteenth year. Before he reached his third year his father married Miss Anna B Simmons, and between her and the boy an attachment sprang up that is seldom seen between a mother and her own son. This mutual regard grew with his years, and shone at its brightest in the last hour that allowed its expression on earth. The news of his death fell with almost crushing effect on his half brother and sister, the only relatives that survive him, and in the house where I now write, everything—but above all—the dear faces show the marks of that heavy blow.

Prof Burke entered the Oregon State University in 1876 as a Freshman in the classical course and graduated with first classical honors in 1881. His essay at graduation on "The Study of the Classics" was one of the finest productions ever delivered in the state. The venerable and cultivated Dr Gaary said to the writer at the depot, "some of the finest things I ever heard he delivered."

At the time of his death he held the position of Adjunct Professor. As a man Prof Burke was commanding in appearance, courteous and kind. To his ardent nature which impelled him to accomplish much, there was added a modest and retiring disposition which guarded and freed his actions from all that would offend. And it can truthfully be said that nature but seldom gives to any one man so many valuable qualities with so little to mar them.

From his earliest childhood he was carefully instructed in the principles of the Christian religion—and his daily walk was the practice of what he had been taught. Although he had never attached himself to any branch of the church, he was punctual in his attendance on the services of religion and kept his associations with the people of God. But a short time before his death he said to his mother, "whether I live or die I am a Christian." The death of Prof Burke is a profound impression in Eugene, especially on the young, and as his mortal remains were borne to the depot, the long line of people composing the procession, as they moved slowly forward with heads bowed and with measured tread, was a sad but expressive testimony to the worth of the deceased.

Resolutions of Respect.

WHEREAS, In view of the loss we have sustained by the decease of our friend and associate, Emory E Burke, and of the still heavier loss sustained by those who were nearest and dearest to him; therefore, be it

RESOLVED, By the Laurean Society, that it is but a just tribute to the memory of the departed to say that in regretting his removal from our midst, we mourn for one whose geniality commended him to the hearts of all; whose counsel was ever on the side of wisdom, and to whom the society ever looked with pride and respect, as being one who, by his faithful and successful discharge of the duties of life placed upon him, reflected honor upon the society.

RESOLVED, That while we deeply sympathize with those who were bound to our departed friend and associate by the nearest and dearest ties, we share with them the hope of a reunion in that better world where partings and sorrows are unknown.

RESOLVED, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of the society, a copy thereof be transmitted to the mother of the deceased, and that they be published in the University column of each of the newspapers of Eugene City.

A Horrible Murder Near Albany.

ALBANY, Or., Nov 5.—One of the most horrible murders ever committed in this vicinity came to light this forenoon. Mr James Finlayson, living about six miles southeast of this city, left his home about 2 o'clock Saturday and went to Brownsville, and upon returning to day about 10 o'clock, found the house locked up. Upon breaking in he found the body of his wife horribly butchered, having been stabbed about twenty times about the head and shoulders with a knife and struck a heavy blow on the head with an ax. The house had been ransacked and money and valuables taken. A boy aged 16 years, a grandson of Mr Finlayson, was left in the field plowing. His shirt was found at home with blood upon it. He came to this city Saturday evening and purchased some clothing, and has not been heard of since. The general supposition is that the murder was committed Saturday, and suspicion is very strong against the boy.

The boy was seen in Jefferson, on Sunday, where he sold his horse to a man named Leonard. This is the last time the boy has been seen. The verdict of the Coroner's jury was that the deceased had been murdered by a blow from an ax, and that the evidence pointed strongly toward the boy.

This has not so far been a good year to figure up Republican majorities.
